Mother of 4 Killed by Lightning in Chevy Chase

Woman Companion Is Paralyzed as Thunderbolt Splits Tree in Garden

A bolt of lightning struck in a Chevy Chase flower garden during yesterday's sudden thunder shower, killed a woman picking violets, paralyzed her companion and frightened residents of the community for blocks around.

Mrs. John B. St. John, 36, mother of four children and wife of the principal actuary of the old-age division of the Social Security Board, was killed in the garden of Mrs. Elizabeth Brooks Taylor, 5134 Klingle street. The same bolt, which split the trunk of a large tree nearby, seriously injured Mrs. Taylor, who was taken to George Washington Hospital.

Mishaps here and in nearby Maryland also injured three children during height of the storm.

Mrs. St. John was a guest at the Taylor home.

Tells Eye-Witness Story

Mrs. William Dove, a neighbor of the Taylor's, gave an eyewitness account of the tragedy.

"I was in my back yard taking in clothes," she said. "The flash of lighting blinded me and I was stunned by the noise. I looked immediately into the next yard where a moment before I had seen Mrs. Taylor and her friend. Mrs. St. John was lying on the ground, face down. Mrs. Taylor was sitting up, bracing herself with an arm extended back of her. Mrs. Taylor started to scream—and I guess I did too."

Police and the Fire Rescue Squad worked over Mrs. St. John for several minutes, but she was pronounced dead by Dr. Herman S. Hoffman, who was summoned from his office at 1718 Rhode Island avenue northwest.

Later, at the hospital, Dr. Hoffman said Mrs. Taylor was paralyzed from the waist down.

Mrs. Taylor's husband, Ross Taylor, is an instructor at George Washington University. Mrs. St. John lived at 4822 Hunt avenue, Chevy Chase, Md. She was the mother of four daughters, Ruth Mary, 10; Betty Jean, 8; Peggy, 7, and Helen Louise, 2. The Taylors have one son, Ross, jr.

Many Emergency Calls

Yesterday's storm struck the city about 3:15 p. m. and lasted less than an hour. Although police and sewer department workers were deluged with emergency calls, the Weather Bureau reported the rainfall established no record. Lightning and thunder was confined to outlying sections of the city and nearby Maryland and Virginia counties.

Sewers overflowed at Connecticut avenue and Legation street, where water covered the sidewalk, and at Fourteenth street and Spring road, where the water stalled automobiles.

The three children were injured in auto mishaps. Gertrude Mann, 6, of Cheverly, Md., was brought to Casualty Hospital with critical injuries after she reportedly had walked into the side of a truck near her home.

Fifteen-year-old Henry Ficks, of 3411 M street northwest, who was struck near his home, received multiple cuts and bruises. Eleanor Roberts, colored, 6, was treated at Casualty Hospital for a fractured leg after she was hit by a street car near Dean avenue and Foote street northeast. In each case, police reported, either the driver or victim was blinded by the heavy downpour.

The highest temperature in Washington yesterday was 81 at 1:15 p. m. and the lowest 65 degrees at 4 a. m. The thunderstorm, it was reported, covered a wide area in Maryland and Virginia, but did little to reduce the temperature.

The clanging of the Town Crier's bell will be the signal for the opening of the sixth annual National Folk Festival this afternoon at 2:15.

With some 2,600 elementary school children in the audience, folk groups from 26 States will begin the three-day parade of Indians, cowboys, lumberjacks, mountain folk and other colorful figures across the stage of Constitution Hall.

This evening's performance, which begins at 8:15, will feature many of the same performers as the matinee, but the program of each will be totally different.

Crier Amos Kubik's "Hear ye! Hear ye!" will be followed by the performance of three Indian tribes. Kiowa Indians in richly feathered head dresses, bells jingling with every step, will perform their snake dance and demonstrate sign singing. Drums and the rattling of gourds will accompany the New Mexican Zunis' basket dance. The Mescalero Apaches, wearing grotesque

U. S. Is Failing Its Children, President Says

Democracy's Future Rests on Them, White House Conferees Told

By Christine Sadler.

Two-thirds of America's future voters are growing up in the one-third segment of the population that is ill-fed, ill-housed, and ill-clothed, delegates to the fourth White House Conference on Children were told yesterday.

After a full day and evening of speeches focused for the most part on economic and birth-rate inequalities, the delegates—including 500 educators, social workers, and welfare leaders—this morning begin a year's study of ways by which the Nation can extend democratic opportunities to all its young.

Little Done for Children

During the day the conferees heard:

President Roosevelt declare that lectures on nutrition mean nothing unless there is food for a child to eat and that compulsory school attendance "is one thing and a chance to go to school another."

Mrs. Roosevelt urge a national viewpoint for consideration of the problem and chide "New York and New England" for being "per-

Educational Directory Wins Official Praise

Givens, Mrs. Doyle, Louisa Roberts Laud Post for Compiling It

Opportunities revealed to adults by The Washington Post's Educational and Recreational Directory for the District of Columbia, published in co-operation with the Adult Education Association, were emphasized yesterday by some of those who helped in its compilation.

They included John W. Studebaker, commissioner of education; Willard E. Givens, executive secretary of the National Education Association; Louisa S. Roberts, executive secretary of the Council of Social Agencies, and Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, president of the Board of Education.

Studebaker said the free distribution of the directory would open "new roads of endeavor" to Washington men and women, and set an example to be followed by other communities in the United States.

"The Washington Post has made a unique contribution to the adult education movement by publishing the Directory of Educational and Recreational Opportunities in the District of Columbia," Studebaker said.

"Here is a guide which is so comprehensive and varied in its appeal that it can be of use to every resi-

Zoo's Hippo, 30, Gets a Mate; Keepers Busy Matchmaking

"We hope it will be love at first sight," whispered Headkeeper William H. Blackburne. "Of course they haven't been introduced as yet."

Blackburne was looking at Pinkie, newly arrived 3,500-pound lady hippopotamus at the National Zoological Park. She was procured as a mate for Bongo, the Zoo's veteran hippo, who has been a widower since 1931. Bongo has been preoccupied lately and has been developing a disturbing set of self-centered bachelor habits.

The courtship has been arranged by master hands. First, spring, season of soft breezes and whatnot, was chosen. Then the principals have been placed in separate facing compartments.

It is hoped that one day Bongo will look across the intervening pool and grunt the equivalent of "Hi, Toots."

Then the happy pair will be allowed to dunk noisily in the tank together.

The hoped-for romance has a December and May tinge; Bongo is thirtyish and Pinky only 11 years old.

ZOO'S GLAMOUR GIRL

Together with a male yak, the female hippo came to the Zoo in exchange for Gumdrop, the baby pygmy hippo, a llama, a black leopard and a young zebu.

City to War On 'Suicide' Intersections

'Walk' Lights at 13th and Avenue To Test Method For Bad Corners

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Plans for sweeping traffic reforms—to include greater pedestrian safeguards, elimination of downtown danger points and a system to facilitate mass transportation—were announced yesterday by Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer.

He stipulated, however, that wholesale application of the proposed plans would depend on success of an "experimental" program to be inaugurated at Thirteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest by the end of June.

Van Duzer's action directly followed a series of stories in The Washington Post revealing hazardous conditions at a number of "suicide corners" throughout the city. Since the series started more than a week ago, hundreds of communications have been received from Post readers nominating other "suicide" sites, making it possible to continue the stories indefinitely.

Study Began in January

In response to numerous inquiries, The Post asked Van Duzer and Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen what corrective measures, if any, were being considered at these danger spots. It was then that Van Duzer, with the approval of Commissioner Hazen, disclosed his plans.

Selecting Thirteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue as typical of the city's hazardous crossings, Van Duzer said a system of pedestrian "walk" lights and safety islands would be installed to provide complete protection to the walker. Studies for this new program, he said, were started last January.

System Explained

The chosen "experimental" corner is 120 feet wide from curb to curb across Pennsylvania avenue. Both east and west of Thirteenth street, safety islands will be installed on the north and south sides of the street car tracks. Pedestrian "walk" lights will be erected on all four corners. Van Duzer explained the system as follows:

A pedestrian crossing Pennsylvania avenue from the south curb will be able to reach the safety island north of the street car tracks on one cycle of the "walk" signal. Here, however, he must remain until the proper light again flashes. The same method applies to pedestrians crossing south-bound.

The pedestrian crossing Thirteenth street will have ample time to complete the crossing on a single cycle of the lights.

Co-operation Imperative

Whether the proposed system will be extended to other "suicide corners" depends entirely upon public reaction, Van Duzer said. For the experiment to be a success, he added, pedestrians must offer "100 per cent co-operation and move only on the proper signals."

"The entire program hinges on the public's willingness to accept

British Rulers May Use Liner For Trip to U. S.

London, April 26 (AP).—An authoritative source tonight said it was "almost certain" King George and Queen Elizabeth would cross to North America next month on a passenger liner so that the battle cruiser Repulse, originally assigned for their use, could be kept at home because of European tension.

The Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Australia was reported to have been chosen, but the admiralty maintained they had not been informed of any change in their Majesties' plans to sail aboard the Repulse May 6.

Those who profess to be worried about sending the Repulse so far from Europe point out that Britain has only three battle cruisers and that two of them, the Hood and Renown, are laid up for repairs.

The King and Queen spent their sixteenth wedding anniversary quietly at Buckingham Palace.

Mexico Confirms Plan To Pay for Seized Land

Mexico City, April 26 (AP).—A presidential decree published today confirmed an arrangement for payment by Mexico for agrarian properties of United States nationals expropriated by the Mexican government.

Mexico, the decree states, will pay $1,000,000 on account in May and not less than $1,000,000 annually on claims approved by the joint agrarian claims commission now in session here.

Merger Bill Forces Seek Quick Vote

Seize on Taber's 'No' Resolution to Assure Victory Before Fight Begins

By Robert C. Albright.

A swift move to terminate all controversy over President Roosevelt's "Reorganization Plan No. 1" by bringing the transfers to an immediate vote was favored last night by influential members of the House and Senate Reorganization committees.

Unintentionally, Representative Taber (Republican), of New York, yesterday paved the way for the stroke when he introduced in the House a concurrent resolution disapproving the plan, asserting that "no efficiency, no economy, and nothing in the interest of the people will be accomplished by it."

The House Reorganization Committee was powerless to act on the program, either affirmatively or negatively, until such a resolution was introduced. Introduction of the resolution cleared the way for a speedy adverse report to the House on the disapproval motion, and a House vote that would would be tantamount to clinching approval at once of the President's plan. Two-house disapproval is necessary to block a reorganization plan.

Byrnes Ready to Act

That this course may be followed in the House was reliably indicated last night to The Post. At the same time, Chairman Byrnes, of the Senate Reorganization Committee, said he will follow the same procedure if a disapproval resolution is offered in the Senate.

Ordnarily, th Taber resolution would lie before the House committee to discharge the committee. By bringing the resolution to a House vote before the ten days is us, the merger plan would be tested when Congressional sentiment for it is at its height, and before organized opposition has developed.

Should the Taber resolution be defeated, and it is virtually certain ot be, the fight on reorganization plan "No. 1" would be over. Under reorganization bill provisions, no further House vote on the plan would be possible. After lapse of the required 60 days, the welfare, works, lending mergers would become law.

Trap Was Set

It was learned that both House and Senate Reorganization Committee leaders considered this strategy the day the President's plan arrived, but introduction of a resolution of disapproval was needed to put it into execution. When the Taber resolution was offered yesterday, one leader of the House group commented: "The trap was set and he walked into it."

No resolution of disfavor was proposed in the Senate, and there was doubt that any would be. But Senator Byrnes served notice that if a resolution is offered, he will immediately call his Senate Reorganization Committee together, and report it back to the Senate for a vote.

Sentiment for plan "No. 1" is so strong in the Senate that Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, pre-

Spencer Tracy's Female Fans Knock Toscanini Down

London, April 26 (U.P.). — Arturo Toscanini, conductor arriving from the United States, was knocked down at the platform of Waterloo Station tonight when he got in the way of a crowd of more than 1,000 women attempting to reach Spencer Tracy, American motion-picture actor.

A porter and six women were trampled in the crush of the 1,000 or more women. Tracy escaped through a door on the opposite side of the train.

'Down With Duce!' Lands 2 in Brig

Marseille, France, April 26 (AP).—Two members of the crew of the American liner President Garfield were in the ship's brig tonight, accused of provoking an unfriendly Italian-American exchange of Genoa yesterday. Officials of the line said the two sailors shouted "down with Mussolini!" as the ship was leaving Genoa.

Italians on the dock countered with "Down with Roosevelt!" "Down with the United States!"

U. S. Mobilization Plan Ready for 1,000,000; Reich to Double Army

1,750,000 of S. A. To Offset British 'Umbrella Troops,' Nazis Declare

By the United Press.

Berlin, April 26.—Germany tonight ridiculed Great Britain's call for military conscription as a "panicky decision" and revealed a plan to offset it by adding 1,750,000 Brownshirt Storm Troopers to the German army.

Disclosure of what foreign military experts described as Reichsfuehrer Hitler's plan to create a "second army" for the Reich was made by Maj. H. Martin of the war ministry in the official S. A. Storm Troop organ.

The controlled Nazi press, meanwhile, asserted contemptuously in reference to British conscription that the fighting fitness of young Britons is the worst among all nations of the world.

Scorn "Umbrella Army"

A Nazi spokesman was quoted as saying: "You can probably train men to use umbrellas in six months, but you cannot train them for modern warfare in that time."

News of Britain's move to conscript 310,000 men a year reached Berlin shortly after information that Hitler, in his speech to the Reichstag Friday noon, will reject in general President Roosevelt's appeal for at least ten years of peace.

Hitler was said to have informed Ribbentrop, Propaganda Minister, Goebbels and Field Marshal Goering at a conference in the afternoon that he would reject Roosevelt's appeal on the grounds that this constitutes the first time in history that any head of a state has requested another chief of state to set the course of his future foreign policy for so many years ahead.

Nazi circles anticipated that Hitler's speech would close with an appeal for peace, leaving the course open, or even taking the initiative for further international negotiations. He was expected to make a statement about the German-Italo-Japanese pact against Communism to which Hungary, Spain and Manchukuo have adhered, and define its aims and future development.

Hitler's attitude was made known as he completed preparations for his speech after failure of Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop to receive a last-minute plea for moderation from British Ambassador Sir Nevile Henderson.

Henderson, whose "snubbing" at the hands of Hitler and Von Ribbentrop was believed to have speeded the conscription measure, finally was forced today after two days of waiting to turn over Prime Minister Chamberlain's "last appeal" to Baron Ernst von Weizsaecker, secretary of state, under Ribbentrop.

Britain Called Warlike

Henderson told Weizsaecker in a 30-minute conversation that the British conscription was not intended as a threat against Germany and was not designed to create a hostile "encirclement" of the Reich. It was designed as a defensive measure, the Ambassador assured.

The assurances did little, however, to soften the blow of the British cabinet's decision and Nazi anger was at high pitch over what was described as a "warlike move" on Britain's part.

The newspaper Nachtausgabe described it as "a new foreign political

Chamberlain Announces Conscription

Laborites in Commons Hoot, Conservatives Cheer Proclamation

By the Associated Press.

London, April 26.—The British government, in a supreme effort to demonstrate its determination to resist "any attempt at general domination," announced today its decision to adopt peacetime conscription for the first time since the seventeenth century rule of Oliver Cromwell.

As his government majority cheered and the Labor opposition jeered, Prime Minister Chamberlain told the House of Commons the government had decided to ask powers to summon all youths in their twenty-first year for six months' military training.

Tomorrow he will present to Parliament a motion expressing approval of the government's decision "to introduce as soon as possible a system of compulsory military training as announced April 26." The Labor opposition announced it would fight both the motion and the subsequent bill. Full dress debate on the issue is scheduled for tomorrow.

Labor members in a special session tonight framed a strongly worded amendment to the govern-

War Department Orders $50,000,000 In Planes, Tripling Any Prior Contract

Quick mobilization of an American army of 1,000,000 men, on a selective basis, in case of war has been planned in detail by the War Department.

Peace-time conscription, however, such as that just announced by Great Britain, "has not even been considered," an Army spokesman said yesterday.

America's vast armament program was speeded toward its completion meanwhile as President Roosevelt and his defense aides called for new warplanes, additional naval bases and younger Army officers.

Contracts for 571 airplanes, costing more than $50,000,000—three times the size of any previous order—were let late yesterday by Assistant Secretary of War Johnson a few minutes after the President signed the $549,000,000 Army appropriation bill, releasing the necessary funds. Working late into the night, Johnson and his aides rushed orders out to manufacturers so that the air expansion program to give the Army 6,000 first line planes in two years can be started immediately.

At the same time, Secretary of War Woodring announced plans to "vitalize" the Army by replacing overage officers by younger men. Rigorous physical examinations for both Regular Army and National Guard officers and mandatory age-in-grade retirement for the former will be applied to weed out officers no longer capable of field duty, he asserted.

War plans call for mobilization of the 1,000,000-man fighting force during the first few months of a major conflict, it is said, of which more than half would be inducted into the service and trained after war actually breaks out.

Would Train 600,000

Under the War Department's plans, an "initial protective force" of 400,000 men would be put into the field immediately upon the outbreak of war. This would consist of the Regular Army, National Guard, Regular Army Reserve, and a few recruits with prior military service. To be equipped with the latest weapons under the present emergency armament program, they would be expected to hold off an enemy until the "protective mobilization plans" became effective.

The "P. M. P.," as it is known to the Army, calls for the recruiting and training of an additional 600,000 men during the first few months of the war. Led and trained by the present Reserve officers, they would be obtained by a selective service draft such as was in effect during the World War. Prior to passage of a universal draft law, the Army would conduct a rigorous campaign for volunteers, with the aid of local civilian committees.

Ordnance Plant Reopened

With the completion of the "M. P. M." during the first year of the war, conscription of a still larger army might then be held necessary, officials state.

Mr. Roosevelt yesterday asked Congress for funds to construct a chain of naval air bases in the mid-Pacific, Alaska, West Indies and continental United States. Under an authorization bill he signed Tuesday, the President requested that $31,621,000 be made available immediately in cash and an additional $33,379,000 be allowed for the bases in contract authorization.

Other defense developments:

The Navy Department announced it was reopening its ordnance plant at South Charles-

Congress Urged to Obliterate Statue Here as Libel on Indians

Portrayal on the steps of the Capitol of the first American as a tomahawk-swinging savage yesterday aroused a member of Congress from the great Northwest to wrath and action.

Representative Burdick (Republican), of North Dakota, proposed in a House joint resolution that an 87-year-old statue depicting a frontiersman rescuing a white woman and child from the shadow of a tomahawk "be ground into dust and scattered to the four winds.

"The American Indian was no worse than some of our own ancestors," Burdick said, "and there's no more reason to memorialize his misdeeds than there would be to set up a monument to witch burners of Salem."

"THE RESCUE"

The time-worn monument on the Capitol steps is of doubtful origin, according to the Library of Congress, although Congress appropriated $7,000 in 1832 to have it brought to Washington. It is named "The Rescue."

"The statue," Burdick said, "is a constant reminder of ill will toward the American Indian."

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

WAR PROPHESY: The shrewdest observer I know in the Capital risks his prestige on two predictions: (1) that Hitler and Mussolini won't go to war as long as Roosevelt is in there looking so sternly in their direction, and (2) that England and France won't go to war until a new president elected on a "peace at any price" slogan is in the White House ready to lead Americans to war.

Sen. McKellar . . . Listen!

He's willing to bet $100 there won't be a European war in 1939.

* * * *

An eminent European who has just come over has been so alarmed by the war talk in America that he's afraid to go home. . . .

He tells Washington friends that everything seemed about as tranquil as usual across the sea when he sailed, two weeks ago.

But after listening to Americans, he doesn't know.

* * * *

FDR'S HEIRS: In student pranks and frolics at the University of Virginia, young Franklin Roosevelt and Marshall Field (I forget whether he's the Third or Fourth) are among the ringleaders. . . . But they're both so publicity-shy that they take good care to see there are no reporters or cameramen around.

FDR, jr., flew to the funeral of his cousin killed in an airplane crash; the modern slant toward flying.

"—Tommy's password"

With his beauteous secretary, Peggy Dowd, temporarily off duty, Tommy Corcoran was expecting some important callers the other day and gave them explicit telephonic instructions about getting into his office.

"Go to a door marked Zilch," he said, or some such name; maybe it was Talley.

"Pound hard on the door. Then you will hear me say:

"Go to blazes!"

* * * *

"But don't pay any attention; just pound louder than ever. Then I'll come to the door and open it."

The callers, with some trepidation, followed instructions. After the first pounding, a voice responded as pre-arranged, except that it said "hell" instead of "blazes."

They pounded again, and Mr. Corcoran came to the door and opened it, grinning.

* * * *

Few salutations in the Senate are so arresting as Senator McKellar's "Listen, Senators!" as he opens a speech on the floor, or swings into high speed.

Few Senators, of course, actually listen to Tennessee's grand old man, but still there's something both challenging and classical about his cry of "Listen, Senators!"

"—they snatched his ballot"

The other day Senator McKellar kept the galleries on edge with a dramatic attack on an obscure national park superintendent in Tennessee. . . .

Among other things, it developed that the man was suspected by the neighbors of being a (sh!) Republican. . . .

Sleuths, in fact, had once (in 1936) snatched his ballot from the ballot box, and vowed that it was marked for Landon. . . .

But the man himself swore he had voted for Roosevelt.

Maybe this had nothing to do with it, but Senator McKellar wanted the man's hide nailed on the Senate wall . . . He offered an amendment prohibiting any money in the park appropriation from being used to pay his salary . . .

He also brought up a dark accusation that the park accounts were more than $100,000 short. Officials had patiently explained to him that the $100,000 item, already carefully investigated, was not a shortage, but an oversight in bookkeeping.

* * * *

But McKellar, looking more every minute like a character out of Dickens, stuck to his guns all afternoon. He refused to be reassured . . . A Republican in Tennessee!

It became obvious that the very thought was obnoxious to the Senator. . . . In the dogfight which developed with the Republicans, Senators Connally, of Texas, and Glass, of Virginia, came to McKellar's aid. . . . So far as he was concerned, the bookkeeping error was a shortage. . . .

"Listen, Senators!" he went on and on.

Leiserson Held Able to Appease NLRB Critics

Expected to Turn Away Wrath and Build Up Agency's Prestige

Soures close to the White House yesterday predicted that William M. Leiserson, in his new capacity as a member of the National Labor Relations Board, would allay by soft answers the wrath which the board previously has incurred from employers.

New Dealers are confident that Leiserson, for five years chairman of the National Mediation Board, will adopt very much the same attitude on individual questions as the board heretofore has adhered to. The difference, therefore, will be, not in what he will say but in the way he says it.

Although he is not expected to assume the board chairmanship, his influence, Administration sources feel, will be considerable. The forecast is made that his appointment to the board will alter appreciably, within a year, the public attitude toward the board.

The belief prevails that the board got in bad, not so much because of the actions of the board itself, as by the attitude of the staff in the field and at the home office. The board, it is said, has been too busy to pay much attention to the necessity for maintaining high standards of fairness and impartiality among all of its personnel.

Leiserson, it is expected, will give particular attention to the matter of personnel. The board was forced, officials point out, to build up a huge staff overnight. In consequence, important staff positions in many cases were handed to vigorous young people who regarded themselves as "missionaries" with a commission to "save the world."

Some of these, it is said, have attained a measure of maturity, and are no wregarded as satisfactory.

Leiserson is expected to banish the feeling many employers heretofore have had that they would not get a square deal before the board.

Several Senators, meanwhile, expressed belief of Leiserson, reasoned conciliator and labor economist of 30 years' experience, might lessen demands for drastic revision of the Wagner labor relations act.

Lewis Would Accept Post

Following a call at the White House, former Representative David J. "Little Davy" Lewis, Maryland, unsuccessful Administration candidate in the purge attempt last summer against Senator Tydings, said he would accept appointment to the place on the mediation board vacated by Leiserson if it was offered.

"I just came own to tell the President that 'Barkis is willing,'" he said, referring to a previous statement by Mr. Roosevelt indicating that he would appoint him.

Senator Holt (Democrat), of West Virginia, member of the Education and Labor Committee, which is considering Leiserson's nomination as well as proposed changes in the Wagner act, characterized the appointment as "a gesture to stave off amendments to the act."

Holt believed amendments would be adopted anyway, but remarked that Lieserson "certainly will be an improvement" over Donald Wakefield Smith, whom Leiserson replaces on the board.

Senator Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, author of proposals for drastic revision of the Wagner act, however, declared he did not think "the quality of the board will be improved at all by the substitution of Leiserson."

The names of the three other applicants will remain confidential, Street said. One is from another city.

House Adjourns 'Out of Respect to That Departed Institution,' the Republican Party

By the Associated Press.

The House adjourned yesterday out of respect to what Representative Rankin (Democrat), of Mississippii, described as that "departed institution," the Republican party.

RANKIN

Representative Treadway (Republican), Massachusetts, had just made a speech assailing the reciprocal trade treaty program. Rankin got up to assert that he had told the House Monday the Republican party was committing suicide and that Treadway was preparing the funeral oration.

He added that after listening to Treadway's speech, he was convinced the House "ought to adjourn out of respect to that departed institution" and made a motion to that effect. The House accepted it amid laughter.

Representative Horton (Republican), Wyoming, was in Emergency Hospital yesterday because of an attack of bronchitis. His condition was not considered serious and he was expected to be back at his office by the end of the week.

Representative Hess (Republican), of Ohio, said he understood a House flood control bloc would attempt to set aside $75,000,000 for flood control in relief fund appropriations for the next fiscal year.

He said it appeared likely a House Appropriations Subcommittee would recommend $110,000,000 for flood control, figure recommended by the Budget Bureau.

If the additional $75,000,000 were set aside, the funds for flood control would be only $10,000,000 less than the $195,000,000 Army engineers have told Congress they could expend for that purpose.

Two Senators—Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, and Radcliffe (Democrat), of Maryland—yesterday urged that William Griffin, editor and publisher of the New York Enquirer, be designated by Congress to try to collect the $12,000,000,000 in World War debts owing the United States.

Support was voiced by the Senators for a resolution filed by Senator Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, to appoint Griffin as United States war debt envoy.

While suggesting the outlook did not appear bright for collection, Radcliffe remarked:

"In any case, I am convinced Publisher Griffin is the man for the job."

The House Rivers and Harbors Committee urged the Florida ship canal yesterday as a project "needful and in the public interest."

In a majority report, the committee supported a bill by Chairman Mansfield (Democrat), Texas, to authorize completion of the $200,000,000 waterway.

A minority report, signed by seven committeemen, termed the canal "unwarranted and unjustified."

Representatives Barnes (Democrat), Illinois, and Springer (Republican), Indiana, became eligible yesterday to appear as attourneys before the Supreme Court. They were presented to Chief Justice Hughes by Chairman Sumners (Democrat), Texas, of the House Judiciary Committee of which they are members.

Post Education Directory Wins Applause of Officials

Directory

dent in Washington. Most people do not know of the facilities that already exist in the community which will help them to lead more interesting lives.

"The directory not only makes available this information, but it will suggest to many men and women new activities in which they may engage. They will find in exploring some of these new roads of endeavor the opportunity of enriching their lives by a more complete development of their personalities.

Few cities have compiled educational guides for adults, and even where they are available the publications are usually expensive and limited in distribution. The free distribution of this directory to the residents of Washington by The Post is setting an example which I hope will be followed in other communities throughout the United States."

Mrs. Doyle's Comment

Need for adult educational opportunities was emphasized by Givens, on behalf of the National Education Association, which he said, "is glad to have had a part in the compiling of this directory issued by The Washington Post.

"The directory reveals," he continued, "the many courses offered in Washington's public and private schools for adults. It shows the numerous facilities for recreation in our parks and playgrounds.

"The list of opportunities for mental and physical growth is sufficiently varied to encourage and stimulate widespread adult participation. Many of the courses are free; others are moderate in price. In this directory every adult, young or old, rich or poor, white or colored, should find some incentive to keep in learning.

Entirely Voluntary

"Adult education is unique in that it is entirely voluntary. It implies self-discipline and continuity of effort. Involving as it does the freedom to accept or reject ideas it is opposed to conformity and is most effective when free from standardization.

"It is hard to believe," Givens remarked, "that here in the United States, with our free press, our public forums, our public schools and libraries, that among our 75,000,000 adults there are 36,000,000 who have not graduated from the elementary school, 15,000,000 cannot read the daily paper intelligently, 3,000,000 are illiterate, and that we have among us more than 4,000,000 foreign born who are practically unacquainted with our language. There is great need for all kinds of adult educational opportunities.

"A glance at this Washington Post directory," he commented, "reveals both a duplication and dearth of courses. Co-ordination of effort is needed to prevent undesirable duplication and to fill existing gaps. Naturally, there are more opportunities for white-collar groups than for laborers, for Washington is a city of Government officials and clerks—a residence city, rather than a commercial one. Library facilities, excellent as they are, reach only part of this horde of office workers. Our whole library program needs to be enlarged and more closely correlated with other adult education agencies.

"Let us encourage our people to make use of the facilities now available as indicated in this directory and let us work for more adequate facilities for everyone because upon the development of our individual citizens rests the future of our democracy."

Louisa S. Roberts, executive secretary of the Council of Social Agencies, said: "I want to congratulate the Adult Education Association and The Washington Post on the publication of the directory. I am sure the information contained in this directory will be of inestimable value to social workers as well as to many other groups and individuals in the community. It is a revelation to find that there are so many opportunities for continuing study in practically all fields, and I believe this publication will be the means of enriching the lives of many individuals by giving them a knowledge of the opportunities that are available to them, so many of them without cost."

Copies of the directory may be obtained free at the office of The Washington Post, at the Public Library and its 11 branches, at the National Education Association, Webster Americanization School, Council of Social Agencies, the Y. Group Health Held Threat to Medical Ideals

Dr. Sargent Terms Doctor-Patient Theme Basis of U. S. Practice

A ringing defense of American medicine, coupled with criticism of group health plans and the sickness insurance plank in the proposed national health program, was sounded here last night by Dr. James C. Sargent, former president of the Wisconsin Medical Society.

Naming no names, the Marquette University Medical School professor nevertheless made it quite clear that those agencies and individuals seeking to institute reforms contrary to policies of the American Medical Association are on the wrong track.

His address was given at the single public meeting on the calendar of the District Medical Society's annual scientific assembly, which will be conducted today at the Hotel Mayflower

Traditional Relationship

Obviously alluding to the exclusion of Group Health Association doctors from most hospitals in the Capital, Dr. Sargent said:

"It should be clear to everyone what the consequences will be if present efforts succeed in taking away from the profession this means of keeping every doctor who would serve the dangerously sick under rigid control. The tragic thing about it all is the fact that the public is actually being led to doubt the motives of the great rank and file of high-principled physicians and surgeons making up the hospital staffs and the medical societies of this and other similar communities throughout the land."

One of the dangers inherent in group schemes is to the traditional patient-doctor relationship, said the visiting speaker.

Privacy Is Destroyed

"An elaborate system of case histories carrying both name and diagnosis is the very framework upon which an organized and standardized system of sickness care is built," he asserted. "And thereis no privacy whatever in records."

Medicine, both as an art and as a science, is now decadent throughout the world except in America "where the care of the sick is still a matter of direct arrangement between a patient and his doctor."

"The medical profession," he sand, "unhampered by government and following its own dictates, has done a remarkably good job over the years in sensing how best to plan for the care of suffering humanity. Despite the many surveys that are being so widely publicized and the multitude of radical changes that are used so freely, it still remains a cold fact that here in free America the state of the public health has reached an all-time high."

Ethical Standards Urged

Young men and women in college as pre-medic students should look to development of cultural values and ethical standards, alumni of George Washington University Medical School were told at a luncheon by Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette College.

Dr. Lewis, a former president of George Washington University, said that one in every five college students don't belong in campus classrooms.

Speaking at the morning scientific session, Dr. R. Lyman Sexton urged the nearly 1,000 attending physicians to impress upon gastritis patients the need of avoidance of nervous tension. Inflammation of the stomach, he pointed out, may be caused by any of a number of conditions and one of the most conspicuous is abuse which could be controlled.

Dr. C. A. Schutz cited the wide incidence of jaundice in children, though he made it clear that the type occurring frequently in the newborn cures itself spontaneously.

Musmanno Here Seeking U. S. Judgeship

Guffey-Favored Candidate for Davis' Post Visits Murphy

Accompanied by Senator Guffey (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, Judge Michael A. Musmanno, of Pittsburgh, again a candidate for a Federal circuit judgeship, called at the Justice Department yesterday for a conference with Attorney General Murphy, and in the end was obliged to introduce himself.

Murphy, delayde at the Capitol by a Congressional hearing, was late for the appointment. Guffey, explaining that he had another engagement and could not wait, left Musmanno to present his own case.

Murphy arranged to interview today Charles Alvin Jones, Pittsburgh lawyer and 1938 Democratic nominee for Governor. Both Musmanno and Jones are regarded as possibilities to succede Judge J. Warren Davis, of New Jersey, who has asked President Roosevelt for permission to retire from the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at Philadelphia.

Decision This Week

Guffey said Murphy had asked for interviews with Musmanno and Jones. He declined to say whom he was supporting for the expected Davis vacancy, but explained he would recommend a successor to Davis before the end of the week.

Guffey insists that Pennsylvania, which already has two places on the Philadelphia circuit court, is entitled to a third place on a population basis. This would leave New Jersey one place and Delaware one.

The situation, however, is complicated. Senator Smathers (Democrat), of New Jersey, is prominently mentioned for the judgeship. This would mean, it is said, that Gov. A. Harry Moore would appoint James H. R. Cromwell, husband of Doris Duke, world's richest heiress, to Smathers' Senate seat.

Compensation for Guffey

Guffey supported Musmanno for the place on the Philadelphia court to which Francis Biddle, counsel for the TVA investigating committee, was appointed. It was reported afterward that the White House would compensate Guffey for this rebuff by naming his man when the expected vacancy occurred due to retirement of Davis.

Musmanno's name again was injected into the picture when the Davis retirement request was receivd. Thn along cam Jones, threatening to eclipse Musmanno.

Meanwhile, Murphy is trying to pursue his announced policy of appointing to the Federal judiciary men of the highest capacity and integrity, regardless of their political ties.

head dresses and masks, will present the maiden's dance or crown dance, considered their most important religious ceremonial.

Spanish colonials from New Mexico will sing folk songs and ballads which were familiar to their ancestors in Spain centuries ago. A French group from Chicago will present two well-known folk dances, Sur le Pont d'Avignon" and "Savez-vous Planter des Choux?" The skirl of Scotch bagpipes will be heard in such familiar Highland tunes as "The Campbells Are Coming" and "The Highland Lassie."

Washington students will revive the ancient psaltery, instrument of the medieval troubadours. Fiddle and harmonica tunes, English morris dances and Tennessee singing games, mountain ballads and plain-song chants also have their place on the program.

Buses for Pupils

A highly unusual feature of today's performance will be the demonstration of a "musical instrument family," ranging from the most primitive folk instruments to the more elaborate ones of the modern era. An ensemble led by W. P. Parkinson, of Le Mars, Iowa, will play tunes dating from the period when each instrument was in use.

Special buses will take school children to Constitution Hall. Through the co-operation of the board of education they will be excused from classes in order to attend the festival. Students in the junior high, senior high and vocational schools and the teachers' colleges have been granted permission to attend tomorrow's matinee.

Festival participants met last night for the one full rehearsal which always precedes the annual festivals.

Tickets for the six festival programs to be held today, tomorrow and Friday are available at The Washington Post, 1337 E street northwest, from 8 a. m. until midnight daily. Prices for the matinees range from 50 cents to $1; for the evening shows, 50 cents to $2.

Alexandria Woman's Club Elects Officers

Mrs. Willard Parker Succeeds Mrs. Oscar Ryder as President

The Washington Post Bureau,
807 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Temple 3707
Delivery Service, Phone Alex. 347.

Mrs. Willard Parker was elected president of the Alexandria Woman's Club at the annual meeting held yesterday in Gadsby's Tavern, succeeding Mrs. Oscar B. Ryder, who has served for a year.

Other officers chosen were Mrs. Richard E. Voell, Mrs. R. C. Brehaut, first and second vice presidents, respectively; Mrs. J. M. Brumstetter, secretary; Mrs. Arthur Mellott, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. George E. Schlosser, treasurer.

The meeting started yesterday morning with round table discussions in the auditorium of the Virginia Public Service Building, Mrs. Parker, then first vice president, presiding. At 1 p. m. luncheon was served at Gadsby's Tavern, when Mrs. Ryder presided, and Mrs. Schlosser and Mrs. Paul Miller gave reports from the recent State convention at Roanoke.

The afternoon session was devoted to annual reports of the officers and standing committee chairmen and the election. Dr. J. Cameron McCluer spoke on the early diagnosis campaign of the local Tuberculosis Association.

A display of handwork of club members was in charge of Mrs. William P. Sadler, and a musical skit closed the program. Those participating were Mrs. Charles E. Outcale, Mrs. Albert C. Dunn, Mrs. Cameron Roberts, Mrs. J. C. Strother, Mrs. W. J. Blake and Mrs. Thomas E. Pullman.

House Renumbering Report

City Manager Carl L. Budwesky presented to the city council, at a meeting Tuesday night, a report of the recent house-numbering controversy, stating that while there has been some confusion it is largely due to house owners failing to place the new numbers on their doors. The principal objection, he said, seemed to be the use of Washington avenue as the east and west dividing line, as there exists in the minds of some persons the idea that an area designated as "east" is not as desirable as the "west." He also states the numbering ordinance was adopted in March, 1937, after numerous complaints from residents and business houses of the confusion and difficulty resulting from the practice of property owners adopting what amounted to their own choice of numbers.

The ordinance was recommended by the late E. C. Dunn, city manager, and its consideration was published from time to time to give citizens an opportunity to place any objections. The total cost of putting the new system into effect was $1,582.25, and the estimated cost to the city of revising the system as requested by the petitioners is $750.

"It is unfortunate," Budwesky said, "that the council was not advised sooner of the attitude of the petitioners. Some adjustment could have perhaps been made before all of the work had been done and the expense incurred." Council received the report without comment or action as to any change in the ordinance.

A proposition that council appropriate $250 toward a public display of fireworks July 4, as private exhibitions are forbidden, was turned down.

Council denied several rezoning requests and set May 23 as the date for a hearing on others.

Mrs. Ida Poole Dies

Mrs. Ida M. Poole, 40, of 5 River road, died early yesterday at Alexandria Hospital as the result of injuries sustained Saturday night just after she stepped from a bus on the River road, near her home, and was hit by an automobile driven by Winfred Walker, 19 years old, of 11 Spring street, Alexandria.

Mrs. Poole was accompanied by J. M. Buchanan, of Monterey, who also was injured, and Dr. Llewellyn Powell, city coroner, yesterday held an inquest but reserved his decision until after hearing the testimony of Buchanan.

Walker said he was driving between 30 and 35 miles an hour, and applied his emergency brakes as soon as he saw the woman on the road.

Mrs. Poole is survived by six children, and by five brothers, Walter, Albert, Louis, Carl and Luther Jenkins.

Charles Humphries Dies

Charles R. Humphries, 69, a retired Southern Railroad employe, died Tuesday at his home, 1105 Prince street, after a long illness. The following children, Walter R., Harry E., George W. and Miss Lillian Humphries, and a sister, Mrs. James Hanson, survive. Mr. Humphries was a member of Potomac Lodge of Odd Fellows and Alexandria Council, No. 5, Order Fraternal Americans.

Genealogist, 79, Keeps Busy Tracing Pierce Family History, Marks 55th Wedding Anniversary by Delving in Records

He Says He Is 'Starting to Coast but Wife Observes He Often Gets Up at 5 A.M. to Work; Finds South's Pierces Are of Yankee Stock

(This series is about men and women 70 or older who are finding so-called "old-age" is really a lot of fun. They still are producing and getting a big thrill out of their work or hobbies. You know some qualifiers. Tell us who they are.—Editor's note.)

By Gerald G. Gross.

As long as people are born and family trees continue to flourish there will be no shortage of genealogists and one of the most meticulous of these pedigree detectives is Harvey C. Pierce, 79, of 1330 Belmont street northwest.

Yesterday he and Mrs. Pierce celebrated their fifty-fifth wedding anniversary, but even this memorable occasion was not allowed to interfere with his daily routine of research preparatory to the publication of a second volume on the seven Pierce families in which he is particularly interested.

30 Years of Investigation

In the couple's living room stand filing cabinets containing tens of thousands of genealogy cards. They represent more than 20 years of intensive investigation, checking, rechecking and writing.

While Mr. Pierce does his ancestral sleuthing, his wife, who is four years his junior, keeps busy as housekeeper and resident manager of the apartment house in which they live. Both she and her husband are natives of Illinois.

For several years Mr. Pierce practically lived at the Library of Congress, poring over genealogical data. In addition, he made many trips to New Bedford and other Massachusetts towns to scan vital statistics of great age. Massachusetts, he explains, was the original American home of the seven Pierce families he is studying, thoug descendants now are scattered everywhere.

South's Pierces of Yankee Stock

"Many of the Pierces who have lived in the South for years are only a few generations removed from Yankee stock, though they may not know it," he says.

A native of Illinois, as is Mrs. Pierce, he came to Washington in 1900 as a census bureau employe, then worked successively in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the Bureau of Internal Revenue, retiring from Government service in 1932.

Mr. Pierce says he is starting to coast, but his wife smilingly observes that he frequently gets up at 5 o'clock in the morning to delve into his records.

Warmth, Rains In Week Spur Crop Growth

Grains 6 to 8 Inches High in Maryland, Bureau Reports

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, April 26.—A week of generally dry and sunshiny weather, interspersed with occasional warm spring rains, gave Maryland's farm crops a boost, the Baltimore Weather Bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture reported today.

The report said weather for the week ending Tuesday was "seasonable" with mean temperatures 7 to 8 degrees above normal and sunshine 30 per cent above normal.

"The week was favorable for growth of crops," the report said. "Some had been held back by cold weather. It also was favorable for field operations, which had been interrupted by wet weather, although much ground is still too wet to permit plowing.

"Grains are growing, are nicely green, and are good to excellent. Grasses and pastures are improving and are mostly good. Wheat is 6 inches high at Northeast and Sykesville, 8 inches at La Plata and 8 to 11 inches at Rock Hall. Rye is 6 to 8 inches high at Sykesville and 10 inches at La Plata and is coming into head at Snow Hill. Oats are doing very well.

"Planting early potatoes, peas and other vegetables, and gardens, sowing oats and tomato and tobacco seeds and bedding sweet potatoes continue over the section, except in the Allegany Mountain region.

"Fruit trees are showing buds in the Allegany Mountain region. In other sections fruit trees, excepting apple, are blooming or are in full and heavy bloom."

Rain Floods Silver Spring Railroad Underpass; Creek Overflows Across Colesville Pike

Montgomery County Bureau of The Post, 9213 Clark Avenue, Silver Spring, Md. Telephone: SHepherd 4200.

Torrential rain yesterday afternoon flooded the B. & O. railroad underpass on Georgia avenue in Silver Spring, forcing traffic to detour for more than an hour before the flooded portion could drain.

Several cars were stalled in the three feet of water that accumulated at the underpass before police were summoned and diverted the traffic past the bridge, which is located at the south entrance to the Silver Spring business district on the most heavily traveled highway in suburban Montgomery County.

The same storm forced closing of a section of the Colesville pike east of Silver Spring when the Sligo branch overflowed its banks and covered the bridge in Sligo Valley Park. Several other park highways were closed as a precautionary measure when sections became covered with mud and water.

Although the rain was heavy in the western suburban district, no washouts were reported in the Bethesda-Chevy Chase area. The East-West highway was kept open the entire afternoon although it was often covered with mud.

Montgomery County police reported no flood difficulties along the roads and creeks of the upper county north of Rockville which escaped most of the storm. The agricultural sections of the county experienced only a mild rainfall.

In the Silver Spring area, electric lights were cut off in a number of stores along Georgia avenue during the height of the electrical storm but were restored in about half an hour. Police said no material property or crop damage was suffered.

U. S. Is Failing Its Children, President Says

Democracy's Futures Rest on Them, White House Conferees Told

haps too placid" when they look at other parts of the country.

Secretary of Labor Perkins assert that economic factors which underlie "the security of home life and conditions which make for freedom of development of the individual" will be emphasized in the year of study.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace laments the tendency of some to "condemn whole groups of people as unworthy." The intelligence quotient, he said, is not a matter of the blood stream but of the economic status.

Numerous speakers compare "all the noise about the old-age groups" with the "little that is being done for children, who are much greater in numbers and more vital to the future of the country."

Dr. Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina, lead a Southern group which made a plea for support of pending legislation that would provide Federal aid to education.

Dr. Isidore Falk, of the Social Security Board, term children "the economic orphans of our society."

Addressing one of the sectional discussion groups, Dr. Falk declared that in America "the larger the number of children in a family the worse the economic conditions of the family."

When the birth rate begins to decline as rapidly as it has in this country, he said, children become the Nation's most valuable natural resource and the "uneven conditions under which they live is of great political significance."

71 Per Cent in Poor Homes

Seventy-one per cent of the child population of America, he said, is in homes "where the income is inadequate or just barely adequate."

"Wth the country growing so close together by development of transportation and communication, the people can no longer afford to be sectional," Mrs. Roosevelt declared, expressing the belief that one of the great menaces to the future of the Nation is found in "fact that we do not know the country as a whole."

President Roosevelt, speaking in the east room of the White House, where morning sessions of the conference were held, declared that democracy's success rested not on "territory, financial power, machines or armaments," but on the "deeplying satisfaction" of its citizenship.

Happy Childhood Denied

"We made the assumption," he said, "that a happy child should live in a home where he will find warmth, food, and affection; that his parents will take care of him should he fall ill; that at school he will find the teachers and tools needed for an education; that when he grows up there will be a job for him and that he will some day establish his own home.

"As we consider these essentials of a happy childhood our hearts are heavy with the knowledge that there are many children who cannot make these assumptions . . .

"We are concerned about the future of our democracy when children cannot make the assumptions that mean security and happiness.

"This conference and the activities which it initiates furnish an opportunity for us to test ourselves and our institutions by the extent to which they serve our children."

Frank Bane, executive director of the Council of State Governments, presided over the largest of sectional discussion groups held in the afternoon at the Department of Labor auditorium. Other group leaders were: Dr. James S. Plant, director of the Essex County juvenile clinic, New Jersey; William Hodson, commissioner of public welfare of the City of New York, and Ruth Andrus, of the University of the State of New York.

Education Tests Democracy

Dr. Graham, speaking in the afternoon, declared democracy is "tested more severely" in the matter of equal educational opportunity than "at any other place." Comparing amounts available for education in various parts of the country, he said:

"We do not have a democracy in America when we put $220 in one child's education annually and less than $20 in another child's.

"The States with the least ability to pay are now paying the highest tax rate for education of their children. If you say you do not believe in Federal aid to education, you simply say you do not believe in equality of educational opportunity in this country."

His words were echoed by Dr. H. L. Donovan, president of the State Teachers College at Richmond, Ky., who declared that South had to educate one-third of the Nation's children "on one-sixth of the Nation's wealth."

Freedom of Press Abused

The Right Rev. Msgr. Robert F. Keegan, executive director of Catholic Charities of the Archdiocese of New York, speaking at the White House, assailed the "freedom of the press" which is abused in "its output of foul magazines, salacious pictures and perverted literature."

"Freedom of the press," he declared, "does not mean the license to undermine the moral fiber of the youth of our land and to pander to the lower instincts."

Homer Folks, secretary of New York State Charities Aid Association and a member of the original White House Child Conference, called by President Theodore Roosevelt, declared:

"The economic well-being of the child's family, the assurance of an income sufficient to provide at least a reasonable standard of living as to essentials, is not so much a third factor to be added to health and education, as an indispensable of their realization."

President's Address at Child Conference

The text of President Roosevelt's address at the White House conference on children in a democracy follows:

It is, perhaps, because I happened to be born with what may be called a "relative mind," and because I have sought to cultivate that kind of thinking for nearly half a century that I think of this conference in the first instance in terms of the past.

Child welfare—to use a much misused term—did not enter into the public conscience of any nation until about one hundred years ago. And we know from reading Dickens and the literature of his period that the well-being of children in those early days was principally considered from the viewpoint of schooling and of crime prevention and the ending of physical cruelty—all interwoven with the sentimentality of the good, the ultra-good, Victorians.

As time went on, some interest came to be taken in every nation, but still the activities of those who sought the bettering of the younger generation of the moment viewed the problem before them as a problem somewhat apart from the relationship of the younger generation to the broader public weal.

Even at the time of the first children's conference to assemble in the White House under the leadership of President Theodore Roosevelt in 1909, the conditions that surrounded child life were discussed more in terms of child life than in terms of the national community.

"Marks New Era"

This was true to a very great extent in the two succeeding White House conferences, and it occurs to me that this, the fourth conference, marks a new and somewhat changed era.

It is still our task to bring to bear upon the major problems of child life all the wisdom and understanding that can be distilled from compilations of facts, from the intuitions of common sense, and from professional skill. This conference, like the others, is composed of men and women having a broad range of experience and interest in matters pertaining to the welfare of children. It is our purpose to review the objectives and methods affecting the safety, well-being and happiness of the younger generation and their preparation for the responsibilities of citizenship.

But we have gone one step further. Definitely we are here with a principal objective of considering the relationship between a successful democracy and the children who form an integral part of that democracy. We no longer set them apart from democracy as if they were a segregated group. They are at one with democracy because they are dependent upon a democracy and democracy is dependent on them.

Our work will not be concluded at the end of the day—it will only have begun. During the greater part of the coming year the members of this conference, representing every State in the union and many fields of endeavor, will be at work. We shall be testing our institutions, and our own convictions and attitudes of mind as they affect our actions as parents and as citizens, in terms of their significance to the childhood of our nation.

Cites Pan American Talk

In an address on Pan-American day, two weeks ago, I said "men are not prisoners of fate, but only prisoners of their own minds. They have within themselves the power to become free at any moment." On April 15, in addressing the heads of two great States, I stated that I refused to believe that the world is, of necessity, a prisoner of destiny. "On the contrary," I said, "it is clear that the leaders of great nations have it in their power to liberate their people from the disaster that impends. It is equally clear that in their own minds and in their own hearts the peoples themselves desire that their fears be ended."

In providing for the health and education of children, for the formation of their minds and characters in ways which are in harmony with the institutions of a free society, democracy is training its future leaders. The safety of democracy, therefore, depends upon the widspread diffusion of opportunities for developing those qualities of mind and character which are essential to leadership in our modern age.

Further, democracy is concerned not only with preparation for leadership, but also with preparation for the discharge of the duties of citizenship in the determination of general policies and the selection of those persons who are to be entrusted with special duties. Beyond this, democracy must inculcate in its children capacities for living and assure opportunities for the fulfillment of those capacities.

The success of democratic institutions is measured, not by extent of territory, financial power, machines or armaments, but by the desires, the hopes and the deeplying satisfactions of the indivudal men, women and children who make up its citizenship.

"Concerned With Ways"

We shall be concerned with ways in which the broad chasm between knowing and doing may be bridged over. We shall be reminding ourselves that all the lectures on nutrition will avail nothing unless there is food for a child to eat; that a law for compulsory school attendance is one thing and a chance to go to school is another. Prenatal instruction cannot assure healthy babies unless the mother has access to good medical and nursing care when the time for the baby's arrival is at hand.

We know how to budget a family's expenditures; we have undertaken to preserve home life for fatherless or motherless children through the joint effort of the Federal Government and the States. We have made great progress in the application of money and service to the promotion of maternal and child health, the restoration of crippled children to normal physical condition, the protection of neglected children and children in danger of becoming delinquent, especially in rural areas, and the elimination of child labor from industries shipping goods in interstate commerce.

Yet, after all has been said, only a beginning has been made in affording security to children. In many parts of the country we have not provided enough to meet the minimum needs of dependent children for food, shelter and clothing, and the Federal Government's contribution toward their care is less generous than its contribution to the care of the aged.

"Our Hearts Are Heavy"

It is not enough, however, to consider what a democratic society must provide. We must look at our civilization through the eyes of children. If we can state in simple language some of the basic necessities of childhood, we shall see more clearly the issues which challenge our intelligence.

We make the assumption that a happy child should live in a home where he will find warmth and food and affection; that his parents will take care of him should he fall ill; that at school he will find the teachers and tools needed for an education; that when he grows up there will be a job for him and that he will some day establish his own home.

As we consider these essentials of a happy childhood our hearts are heavy with the knowledge that there are many children who cannot make these assumptions.

We are concerned about the children of the unemployed.

We are concerned about other children who are without adequate shelter or food or clothing because of the poverty of their parents.

We are concerned about the children of migratory families who have no settled place of abode or normal community relationships.

We are concerned about the children of minority groups in our population, who, confronted with discrimination and prejudice, must find it difficult to believe in the just ordering of life or the ability of the adults in their world to deal with life's problems.

We are concerned about the children living beyond the reach of medical service or lacking medical service because their parents cannot pay for it.

We are concerned about the children who are not in school or who attend schools poorly equipped to meet their needs.

We are concerned about the children who are outside the reach of religious influences, and are denied help in attaining faith in an ordered universe and in the father of God.

Furnish an Opportunity

We are concerned about the future of our democracy when children cannot make the assumptions that mean security and happiness.

This conference and the activities which it initiates furnish an opportunity for us to test ourselves and our institutions by the extent to which they serve our children. I look to you for comprehensive review of the problems before us, and suggestions as to practical ways in which we may advance toward our goal.

Many branches of the Federal Government are engaged in the promotion of the health, education, and well-being of the Nation's children. You will be asked to consider the points at which these undertakings may be strengthened, and the needs for services which cannot be supplied with the resources at hand. But the attention of this conference must not be directed to Federal activities alone, or even to joint Federal and State undertakings. It is the local community which is the focal point for all these programs. Children receive benefits not in Washington but in the places where they live.

The men and women within the sound of my voice, as well as you who are assembled at the White House, are in the larger sense members of this conference. Recommendations will be brought to us in a final session next year. It then will be for all of us to determine the extent to which they will be translated into action. I bid you, the members of the conference, Godspeed in your high endeavor.

District Moves To Eliminate SuicideCorners

the safeguard. They will be fully protected if they obey the lights," Van Duzer said. "It would be a useless expense to establish this system on a wholesale scale if we find it doesn't work."

He pointed to F street at Twelfth and Thirteenth streets, where "walk" lights have been installed for several years, and asserted:

"I dare say 90 per cent of all pedestrians who use those crossings pay no attention to the walk' signals. We plan to base all future installations on results of our experiment on the avenue."

Signals for Thomas Circle

He revealed also that a system of pedestrian lights guiding walkers on "walk" and "don't walk" signals will be established at Thomas Circle before present construction work on the underpass is completed.

Van Duzer estimated it would cost approximately $500 an intersection to erect pedestrian lights at all necessary points. He pointed out that recommendations for pedestrian protection measures at principal downtown intersections were included in a House sub-committee report as far back as 1936, but Congress has yet to supply adequate funds.

The Post Commended

In commenting on The Post "suicide corner" series, Commissioner Hazen declared:

"The Post articles may have given the impression of criticizing authorities, but I feel they have done much to call public attention to conditions. They expressed the layman's views—and that's what we want."

Hazen said all available funds for traffic improvements were being spent to best advantage for the greatest number.

"We can't make everything perfect," Hazen said, "principally because of the unusual layout of our streets. This city was laid out for horse and buggy traffic and not modern motor cars and trolleys. We need the help of all our citizens in correcting conditions—and that help can best be given by support of our present rules and regulations. We can't do it all."

Two New Plans Offered

Representative Harry Sandager (Republican), of Rhode Island, new member of the House District Committee, sadi yesterday he would introduce a bill to prohibit ticket fixing, even by members of Congress. Ticket fixing, he said, and lack of speed law enforcement, are the chief sources of trouble here.

A special committee headed by Van Duzer recommended that all playgrounds be fenced, with entrance gates at corners where practicable, that parking be limited on both sides of street adjacent to unfenced playgrounds, and that parking should be prohibited 30 feet on each side of entrances to fenced playgrounds. It also urged that signs limiting speed to 15 miles an hour at playgrounds be placed and removed by janitors, and that playground supervisors should designate safest routes for children to and from the grounds.

dicted "there won't be three Senate votes against it if it comes to a vote."

Taber Urges Study

Democratic sentiment for the program appeared equally as solid in the House, and House Republicans appeared divided on the Taber move. Declining a statement on the merits of the plan pending "study and analysis," House Minority Leader Martin said Taber "acted on his own."

"I had made a study of the plan, and was prepared to go ahead where others were not," Taber told reporters. "I know the dangers in it that will become apparent to others after they have studied it."

The New York Republican told the House that "the idea of mixing temporary relief agencies with permanent agencies of the Government in the same set-up is entirely destructive—destructive both of the morale of the permanent agencies included in the set-up, and designed to promote a permanent continuation of the relief agencies."

Bankhead Answers

Taber's charge was challenged from the floor by Speaker Bankhead, who pointed out that Congress still retains the power to extend or terminate the life of merged temporary agencies, through legislature or withholding of appropriations.

"You cannot have this kind of a consolidation without reducing the efficiency of the permanent agencies to the level of the relief agencies, which is notoriously low," Taber said in a statement.

"Unless the Congress meets its responsibilities and comes to the rescue of the Government by disapproving of this plan, the forces designed to destroy the efficiency of the Government will have accomplished their purposes and destroyed whatever is left of the efficiency in the agencies affected."

Other Bill Displaced

Plan "No. 1," merging welfare agencies under a new Federal Security agency, works activities under a Federal Works agency, lending units under a Federal Loan agency, and centrallizing budget functions under the President's own office, has temporarily displaced the Byrnes bill which sought the same objectives through a slightly different alignment.

Byrnes said yesterday he will proceed with other legislative features of his bill as soon as the President's plan is acted upon. Supplementary legislative provisions he will seek to enact include a formula for distribution of relief funds, a requirement that States and localities put up one-third of the cost of relief projects, and elimination of projects financed 100 per cent by the Federal Government.

Greenbelt Fathers To Honor Mothers By PinningDiapers

A diaper-pinning contest for fathers is scheduled to feature the Mothers Day observance at Greenbelt, Md., May 14.

Community Manager Roy S. Braden said yesterday he hoped every father would participate. The Government-built town has one of the highest birth rates in the country. Since October 1, 1937, when the community was settled, 350 "blessed events" have been recorded.

Md. Laundries Ask Lower Jobless Tax

By the Associated Press.

Representatives of the Baltimore Laundries Association asked the Maryland Congressional delegation yesterday to seek a reduction in social security taxes paid by laundries.

They contended at a meeting with the delegation that as a year-around business their employes rarely were without work, and money they paid for unemployment insurance "goes to seasonal industries." Members of the delegation, however, doubted whether Congress would agree to the reduction.

U. Md. Chemistry Show to Feature 'Live Moth Balls'

The University of Maryland's eighth annual chemistry show, featuring "live moth balls," "liquid air" and "cold light," will be held at College Park tomorrow and Saturday nights.

There will be 170 exhibits, including demonstrations by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the United States Bureau of Chemical Warfare. Dr. Malcolm Haring of the university chemistry department, will supervise exhibits on the work of liquid air.

To climax the shown, a small-scale model of a "perpetual motion" machine will be displayed.

Cleveland Police Hunt 23 Indicted In Numbers Racket

Cleveland, April 26 (AP).—Police squads toured Cleveland tonight to round up 23 men indicted on extortion charges by a grand jury ordered to investigate "racketeers and muscle men" in Cleveland's lucrative numbers games.

Authorities estimated drawings flourishing in Cleveland's colored districts have returned their operators $5,000,000 a year. Numbers game warfare was blamed for six killings here since 1931.

Close guard was placed on six secret key witnesses. "We want them where no one can reach them, and where there can be no reprisals," declared Eliot Ness, city safety director.

Only after a year's patient persuasion did all the 75-odd witnesses give up their reluctance to testify, said Ness.

Nazi Germany Stifles Culture, Ickes Declares

Exiled Scientists, Writers Welcome In U. S., He Says

By the United Press.

New York, April 26.—Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes tonight accused Nazi Germany of strangling culture by prohibiting the free exchange of ideas and said the United States is proud to offer a haven to distinguished writers and scientists who are not welcome in the Third Reich.

Speaking under auspices of the American Guild for German cultural freedom, he assailed totalitarian nations for advocating "neo-barbarian" racial theories which lack scientific foundation, citing the contributions of "proscribed" races to American culture. His address was transmitted from coast to coast by the National Broadcasting Co.

"In the last six years," Ickes said, "One European country—Germany—has enriched us with some 400 scientists, artists and men of letters, at least three of whom, including Thomas Mann, one of our distinguished guests tonight, are Nobel prize winners. These men of the mind and the spirit would be a glory to any nation, and it is a tragic commentary upon our twentieth century civilization that, in the full flower of their genius, they should be compelled, at the risk of their very lives, to seek shelter thousands of miles from their homeland."

Exiles "Thrice Welcome"

The exiles, he said, "are thrice welcome here as civilized human beings . . . They have witnessed scenes of desolation and of terror; their startled eyes have seen what happens to culture and to all the sacred values of civilization when a sterile and brutal intelligence is permitteid to make a litter of the rights of humanity; a shambles of the fruits of the spirit. They have seen the devastating results that follow the assassination of character the murder of culture, the strangulation of the spirit and even the torture of human bodies . . ."

He predicted that German culture, although temporarily in eclipse, once again will enrich the civilization of the world when freedom is permitted in the land where it flowered.

The totalitarian nations, he charged, have projected a "brutal assault on the citadel of the hard-won physical freedom and intellectual liberty of mankind."

The experience of America, he insisted, demonstrates the fallaciousness of "racial superiority" theories.

The Races Contribute

"Our Nation, we must never forget," Ickes said, "is an amalgam of the races of Europe and the cultures of the world. The English have given us our basic ethnic stock, our language, our principles of equality and our conception of justice. The Germans have contributed music and a sense of the nobility of industry. The Jews have given us religion, while the Latin and Slavic peoples have thrown in art and the joy of living."

He pointed out that between 1820 and 1920 more than 33,000,000 immigrants entered this country. More than 12 per cent of distinguished individuals whose lives are recorded in the dictionary of American biography, he said, were born outside the United States demonstrating that the foreign-born made their full contribution to the national culture.

If racial superiority theories were correct, he contended, "then our whole national history is a lie; then we must deny that the United States really has a civilization. More than this, we must question whether we even exist . . . I submit that they over there debase the truth and degrade the known history of mankind."

Mental vigor, he said, "comes from the clash of minds, not from the goose-stepping of beliefs and opinions; hence we desire to encourage freedom of opinion."

Not even the most powerful tyrant, he said can kill the soul of man, because exiles keep alive the fire of their culture, biding their time until their homeland wants them back.

"In the meantime," he said, "we, the hosts of so many of these men of the spirit, are the gainers, benefiting from their skill and learning from their wisdom and their experience."

Bogus Cancer Aid Solicitors Seek Funds Here

A warning against 'solicitors of "dime memberships" was issued yesterday by the Women's Field Army of the American Society for the Control of Cancer.

"We have been informed that door-to-door solicitors have been asking for dime contributions without authorization by our organization," officials asserted yesterday.

"Our campaign is being conducted in department stores and our headquarters are at the Mayflower Hotel," they continued.

"Memberships are being sought by our authorized agents at $1 each and our literature is being distributed free."

Chamberlain Announces Conscription

Laborites in Commons Hoot, Conservatives Cheer Proclamation

British

ment motion saying the conscription proposal "is further evidence that the government's conduct of affairs throughout these critical times does not merit the confidence of the country or of this house."

The amendment, to be offered by Opposition Leader Clement Attlee, would call for the government's resignation if adopted, but Chamberlain was expected to push through his motion by a safe margin and follow up with the conscription bill next week.

Chamberlain estimated that about 310,000 men yearly would be involved, but this figure would be reduced "very considerably" by deductions, said to include exemption for physical disability and of persons now occupied in armaments or other defense industries.

200,000 Is Estimate

One estimate was that the net first class to be called would number 200,000 men.

His reasons for making Britain the latest of the major powers in Europe to adopt conscription before a war, Chamberlain said, were for defense, to assure ability to effect pledges to protect independence of Poland, Rumania and Greece, and because:

"Despite the immense efforts this country already has made by way of rearmament, nothing would so impress the world with the determination of this country to offer firm resistance to any attempt at general domination . . ."

He also announced he was reinforcing antiaircraft defenses, that "throughout the period of uneasiness, which may last for a considerable time," it was necessary to call up some territorial and nonregular air force personnel. A bill to limit profits of armament industries is to be introduced also.

It was disclosed that from now on every antiaircraft gun and searchlight in the country will be manned 24 hours a day.

The royal air force is patroling the east coast every night as a precaution against sudden attack.

"Peace Time" Not the Word

"We are not at war now," Chamberlain told the House, "but when every country is training all its resources to be ready for war, when confidence in the maintenance of peace is being undermined and everyone knows that, if war were to come, we might pass into it in a matter not of weeks, but of hours, no one can pretend that this is peace time in any sense in which the term could fairly be used."

Before his speech, the prime minister told a questioner that Britain was ready to discuss a "general settlement" with Germany—if "satisfied such a discussion would be welcome and would be likely to have useful results."

He told another questioner he was ready "to participate in any conference," although no specific invitation to a world conference had been received from President Roosevelt.

Chamberlain's conscription announcement had been carefully timed to show British determination before Hitler answers the Roosevelt appeal for a 10 to 25-year peace agreement in a speech to the Reichstag Friday, but one result was a widening of the gap between the government and its labor opposition.

"I thought you brought us piece in our time," one Laborite yelled, paraphrasing the hope Chamberlain expressed with the Munich agreement to partition Czecho-Slovakia.

"Resign! Resign!" yelled others.

But on the government side of the house, where Chamberlain rules with a large majority, there were cheers and nobody doubted his ability to push through the conscription bill.

To opposition rejoinders, the prime minister replied that "My conscience is clear."

Before he made his announcement, British envoys in Berlin and Rome were instructed to tell the German and Italian governments of the British decision. The United States, the Dominions and the new British allies also were advised.

Chamberlain told trade union delegates this morning that these allies had urged conscription.

There was a rush tonight to join the territorial army, which is similar to the United States National Guard. It was announced that any 20-year-old lad could join the "Terriers" up to midnight, thus enlisting for week-end and evening training instead of the six months of full training. The territorial period of service, however, is for three and one-half years.

The adoption of conscription, even of the limited nature presently announced, was expected to expedite widening of the British-French alliance of nations.

Soviet Russia had sent a message that it would be easier to believe in British determination to defend the present territorial alignment in Europe if she called up an army strong enough to do so.

Diplomatic circles expected Russia and Turkey to join the alliance soon.

Forego Any Neutrality Laws, Miss Thompson Urges Congress

Would Give Diplomats Freedom of Action, She Says; AFL Dissents

Complete repeal of all neutrality legislation, leaving freedom of diplomatic action to negotiate for peace "in advance of war," yesterday was urged before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee by Dorothy Thompson, newspaper columnist.

Miss Thompson, whose column, "On the Record," appears in The Post, told the committee she could not believe "that a desperate attempt to stay out of war constitutes a foreign policy. We become so obsessed by the fear of war that we strangle ourselves."

Earlier, Paul Scharrenberg, legislative representative of the American Federation of Labor, read a statement for President William Green declaring that "the present neutrality law has served the interests of peace between nations and that it should be continued as it was enacted in 1937."

Clark Replaces Lewis

Meanwhile, Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, strong advocate of mandatory neutrality legislation and joint author of the Nye-Clark-Bone bill to impose a rigid arms embargo on belligerents, was named to the Foreign Relations Committee by the Senate Democratic Steering Committee.

To take the post, Clark will resign from the Military Affairs Committee, where he forced publication of data on sales of American planes, to France. Clark's appointment will strengthen the mandatory neutrality minority on the committee, as he succeeds the late Senator Lewis (Democrat), of Illinois, who favored complete repeal of neutrality legislation, diametrically opposed to the Clark position.

Meanwhile, a neutrality act amendment exempting American ships from the "cash and carry" ban when they traded with outlying parts of belligerent territory, outside the danger zone, was informally proposed. Designed to safeguard American shipping interests in event of a war, the amendment was reputedly discussed at a conference Tuesday between Chairman Pittman and R. Walton Moore, counselor of the State Department.

Wants No "Apron Strings"

Senate Minority Leader McNary was reported seeking support among both Democrats and Republicans for a simple extension of the present neutrality act, "cash and carry" provisions of which will expire next month unless prompt action is taken.

Before the Senate Committee, Miss Thompson testified yesterday that American interests apparently lie with the British-French alignment, but declared she did not think "we should tie ourselves to anybody's apron strings."

"At this moment in world affairs we have a very much better chance of survival and prosperity and the preservation of American institutions in a world in which the predominance of power is held by the British commonwealth of nations and France, than in a world in which the predominant powers might be Germany, Italy and France," she said.

Keep Freedom of Action

"There is no question in my mind about it. I feel very strongly about it, but nevertheless I feel we should keep our diplomatic freedom. These are sovereign states, and you do not know what they are going to do tomorrow. You never can know."

The present neutrality act, Miss Thompson characterized as "an open invitation to aggression" and said it "ties our hands in advance of situations which we cannot possibly foresee."

She concluded: "I think we should keep freedom of action. I think we should do everything possible to make the rest of the world know that this country is against aggression. I think we should say that we are not disinterested in the continuation of world anarchy, and I think we should use our diplomatic means to try to get a peace now in advance of the war, a peace with justice by negotiations."

DOROTHY THOMPSON

A. F. L. Wants No Change

She said an "enormous injustice" was done Germany at Versailles, "but I do not want to see another and worse Versailles dictated at the point of the sword, which will then prepare the way for another and a worse war." She declared America cannot avoid a responsibility for helping re-establish international law against aggression, and helping "keep the raw materials of the world open."

Speaking for Green, Scharrenberg previously testified that the A. F. L. opposes changes at this time in the neutrality law, "for any change in this legislation might be interrupted as a change in foreign policy."

"So essential is it for our country to do its part in maintaining peace between nations that in my opinion we should do everything possible to avoid raising any doubt as to our wish to remain aloof from the controversies of other countries," Scharrenberg said.

Asks Embargo on Japan

Declaring "American labor is disturbed by obvious efforts to promote war hysteria" and opposed to "sending another generation into the trenches of war," the Green statement concluded:

"This is no time for experimentation. Labor therefore urges continuance of a measure that has been helpful in the hope that peace may be served."

Before the House Foreign Affairs Committee, Dr. Charles C. Hyde, international law professor at Columbia University, said there was "no obligation on the part of the United States not to penalize a nation that is disfavored."

Ralph Emerson, representing the maritime unions of the C. I. O., before the House Committee, favored an embargo on trade with Japan. Emerson said it was "sickening to our men to have to go through picket lines of little Chinese children and women to load scrap iron for war."

bluff by Britain" and as "Chamberlain's laughable menace."

Most of the controlled Nazi newspapers minimized the effects of British conscription on the balance of power in Europe and sought to assure their readers that the whole idea of conscription was unpopular with the British people.

S. A. Already Trained

Maj. Martin, in discussing the plan to put the Brown Shirts on a full military basis, called for closer contact between the German army and the Storm Troops under under the provisions of Hitler's January decree which entrusted the S. A. with the training of German youth.

It is necessary, the war ministry official said, for all S. A. leaders to be reserve officers of the regular army.

"The ideal condition will be attained when the S. A. leaders command, as military officers, the same bodies of men they command in the S. A., he said.

The measure in effect transforms the S. A. into another army because the Brown Shirts already have been given specialized military training.

Army of 3,500,000

The estimated German peacetime army establishment is about 750,000 men, with more than 1,000,000 trained reserves. The addition of 1,750,000 S. A. Brown Shirts would give the Reich about 3,500,000 trained army men.

In addition, there are about 230,000 men of the elite "S. S." Storm Troops, or Black Shirts.

(French military experts estimated today that 2,250,000 men were under arms in Germany, including the S. A. and S. S. troops and the Nazi premilitary labor units).

Rome Forecasts Retaliation

Rome, April 26 (U.P.).—Fascist leaders predicted tonight that the Rome-Berlin axis would be compelled to adopt new military measures in order to counterbalance Great Britain's conscription decision.

The British announcement of compulsory service, they said, will increase Europe's "war jitters."

There was nothing to indicate what form the predicted measures might take. Observers believed some detailed plan for coping with the alleged "encirclement" of the western powers was drafted at the recent conference of the German and Italian chiefs of staff.

The Fascist press sought to minimize the importance of British conscription, attributing it to French pressure and assuring Italians that it was extremely unpopular with the British people. Leaders revealed, however, that they were concerned over indications that Britain intends to "stand pat" against any further concessions to the totalitarian powers.

Italians were convinced that British conscription, obviously designed as a warning to Reichsfuehrer Hitler, would induce the Nazi chancellor to take a stronger tone in his Friday Reichstag speech.

Mussolini will examine the possible results of the British move on the European situation with his cabinet Saturday morning.

Some ultra-Fascists believed Britain's move might have the effect of converting the anti-Comintern pact—established by Italy, Germany and Japan and adhered to by Hungary, Spain and Manchukuo—into one of the world's most powerful documents by binding its members in a military alliance.

ton, W. Va., closed since the World War, to enable the Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation to speed up warship construction. A portion of the factory will be leased to the company for processing of light weight steel plates used in construction, it was said.

Despite the enlistment of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh in the Administration's drive to expand air research facilities to match those of Germany's, a House-Senate conference committee on the second deficiency bill eliminated a $4,000,000 initial fund for establishment of a large research center at Sunnyvale, Calif. The project, opposed by Virginia Congressmen on the contention it would duplicate the existing research plant at Langley Field, Va., will probably be revived before the session ends, its advocates indicated.

The House passed and sent to the Senate two bills designed to strengthen the Navy and Marine Corps officer group. One would retain in active service all qualified officers for whom there are no vacancies in the rank above and who under existing law must retire.

The other would give reserve commissions to aviation cadets upon their graduation from the Pensacola Flying School and retain them on active duty for seven years instead of three. The latter measure calls for increasing the number of reserve fliers from 1,500 to 6,000.

Unusual Speed

While there was no formal recognition that yesterday's defense measures were timed two days before Hitler's reply to President Roosevelt's peace plea, and at the same time as Great Britain announced conscription, officials pointed privately to the unusual speed with which the Army supply bill was signed and the funds for the naval bases proposed. Ordinarily several days elapse before the President signs a bill, while the department concerned studies the measure. Similarly, Presidential demands for funds a few hours after a project is authorized is reserved for emergencies, officials declared.

The aircraft order was split among five manufacturers, with additional contracts for engines and accessories. Because of the rush in getting out the orders, details were withheld until today. Four types of fighting planes and a small number of photographic planes are included, it was said. The former are four-engine bombers of an improved "flying fortress" design, attack bombers, single-engine pursuit planes, believed capable of speeds in excess of 400 miles an hour, and fast climbing "pursuit interceptors."

Secretary Woodring, in announcing plans for eliminating older and physically unfit Army officers, said the action will apply to them "the same rigorous vitalization which is now taking place in its organization and armament."

He said he will soon ask for legislation to Congress which will eventually remove from active service all over-age officers in the grades of captain to brigadier general. Mandatory age limits for each grade—not yet determined—will be written into the law. The number of officers to be retired was not estimated, although it was said that the cost of the move would not exceed an average of $400,000 a year over a ten-year period.

In addition, Woodring said, the department will convene special medical boards during the next two months to give "rigid physical examinations for all officers of the grade of captain and above." Declaring that "this strict physical test" should also apply to National Guard officers, the Secretary said he would ask the Governors of all the States to give similar examinations to the Guard.

In his announcement, Woodring said that at present there are "many officers who are far in advance of the age in which they could be expected to carry on the physical requirements of field duty" of their grade.

5,000 Officers Affected ... ...

"The net result of these personnel measures would effect an immediate vitalization of the initial protective force of the Nation," he concluded, "in connection with Congressional action now being taken with respect to armament and equipment, the measures will aid materially in answering the concern of the people as to the readiness and adequacy of its military forces."

Principally affected by the move are the 5,000 Army officers taken into the service during the World War. Depending upon their original appointment date—often only a few days apart—the World War officers are spread through the ranks of captain, major and lieutenant colonel. Their ages range from the low forties up to 64, with many captains and majors in their fifties and sixties.

Forty-eight-year-old Secretary Woodring, had he remained an officer of the Army after the war, would have been only a captain now, officers declared, while Assistant Secretary Johnson, a few months younger than his chief, would have been a junior major had he remained in the service.

The speed with which President Roosevelt initiated action on new naval bases will be matched in Congress and by the Navy Department, Chairman Schrugham of the House sub-committee on naval appropriations, said funds will be included for them in the Navy supply bill to be reported to the House within the next two weeks. At the department it was announced that work would be started this summer and the bases would require three years for completion. Special authority to negotiate contracts for the outlying bases may be invoked, it was said.

While disapproving the Sunnyvale research center, the Congressional conference committee reported back the $160,000,000 deficiency bill with other defense provisions intact. The measure rovides $36,500,000 for naval shipbuilding, and $110,000,000 in cash and contract authorization for equipping the Regular Army and National Guard with modern weapons and equipment.

Daladier Sees His War Chiefs On Near East

Syrian Situation, Cession of Hatay Discussed at Length

Paris, April 26 (AP).—Premier Daladier held an unexpected conference today with ranking military and diplomatic chiefs on France's position in the near East.

Long talks at the war ministry were understood to be concerned particularly with France's strained relations with her mandate of Syria and the means of handing over the Republic of Hatay (Alexandretta) to Turkey without making those relations worse.

Foreign Minister Bonnet was to confer with Gabriel Puaux, French high commissioner in Syria, but Daladier himself decided to preside at the conference and, because of the military implications of any move in the near East at present, called in as well Gen. Maurice Gustave Gamelin, chief of the general staff of national defense.

Annexation of Hatay was understood to be already agreed upon between France and Turkey and is believed part of Turkey's price for joining the French-British collective security bloc.

Hatay's administration already is dominantly Turkish, although some units of French troops still are stationed there.

French efforts to expand the French-British front extended as well to Rumania. Bonnet planned to see the Turkish Ambassador tonight and then to go to the railway station to welcome Rumanian Foreign Minister Gafencu, arriving from London.

Informed French circles believed yesterday's announcement of a 1939-40 British budget totaling $6,177,600,000, of which nearly half was earmarked for preparedness, and the formal announcement of conscription today would have a "steadying" effect on Reichsfuehrer Hitler's Friday speech.

The French have felt that British conscription to help match the regimented strength of Germany and Italy was indispensable.

Britain's Young Men Face Conscription

'Had to Come,' Britons Say of Conscription

Poll Shows 70% of Public Back Move, Officials Declare

By the Associated Press.

London, April 26.—First reaction of the average Briton to conscription was expressed in four words—"it had to come."

Another favorite expression was "a step in the right direction."

These terms of approval was mingled with the protests of labor and the idealism of some who would have preferred a voluntary basis for increasing armed strength.

Even many of the latter were agreed with the majority on one point—stand up to the totalitarian leaders.

Government sources said a sampling of public opinion showed that 70 per cent of the country was behind the move.

A restaurant proprietor declared: "For us to guarantee the territorial independence of Poland with the army we had was like me guaranteeing the Bank of England."

Trade union leaders, who represent more than 5,000,000 men, say they fear consequences not only for industry, but for the laborers themselves.

Supporters of conscription argue that it was necessary to sacrifice liberty temporarily so as not to lose it forever. They point out that France and Switzerland have conscription and still regard themselves as democracies.

Here's the way it looked, for instance, to Alfred Harkins, 20, a plumber's helper:

"I'm handy with tools and I might do a bit of good there," he said.

Would his mother approve?

"She wants to see 'those fellows' stopped before there's war."

What about business?

A laugh. His pay is about $15 a week.

What about his financee, Sally?

Soviet Envoy Sent to Court Bulgars, Turks

Closer Relations With Sofia Seen After Long Talk With Premier

By the Associated Press.

Sofia, April 26.—Possibility that Soviet Russia and Bulgaria might establish a diplomatic relations was reported in informed quarters today after a 75-minute conference between Premier Kiosseivanoff and Vladimir P. Potemkin, first assistant foreign affairs commissar of Russia.

It was said the Soviet Union was considering the appointment of a minister to Bulgaria, a post vacant for a year. Russia has taken little interest in Balkan affairs for a long time, but Potemkin now is en route to Ankara, where it is believed he will discuss Turkey's relations with Great Britain, France and Russia.

Observers expect Bulgaria, an object of compeiition of the Rome-Berlin axis, and France and Great Britain will be a major subject of discussion at Ankara. After his talks in Turkey, Potemkin is expected to return here, possibly to see King Boris.

Bulgaria chose the day of Potemkin's visit to give publicity to territorial demands against Rumania and Greece, but newspapers were not permitted to speculate on any claims for Yugoslav territory.

[Potemkin will go to Bucharest from conferences in Ankara and Sofia, Rumanian officials revealed, the United Press said.

[Rumanian political leaders saw in Potemkin's visit the possibility of a Black Sea pact and a discussion of the entire question of Russia's rope in the European guarantees of Rumanian independence.

[Rumania, like Poland, has been reluctant to enter into any commitments involving Russian aid because of a fear of permitting the red army on their territories which belong to Russia before the World War.—Editor's note.]

America's Warned Of U. S. 'Threat'

Milan, Italy, April 26 (AP).—Premier Mussolini's newspaper Il Popolo D'Italia, warned Latin-American countries today of a "threat" it said was contained in proposals of the United States to facilitate their rearmament.

"Once armed at the expense of the Unitde States . . . the republics of Latin America may remain in a perennial state of subjection . . .

"Is Mr. Roosevelt prepared to give assurances that the United States will not threaten . . . for a period of at least ten years, the independent nations of Latin America?" the paper said.

Lothian Favors U. S.-British Action On War Debt

London, April 26 (U.P.).—The Marquis of Lothian, British Ambassador-Designate to the United States, indicated tonight he favors reopening of negotiations for settlement of Great Britain's war debt to the United States.

The Marquis declined to state specifically his attitude toward the debt, but intimated it corresponds with views he expressed in the House of Lords July 21, 1938, when he suggested "a token payment of £2,00,000 ($10,000,000) a year as evidence that we admit the debt and mean to settle the debt when circumstances permit."

Griffenhagen Plan Hearing Held

The House sub-committee on District reorganization met in executive session yesterday to discuss the mevised Griffenhagen plan. Chairman Kennedy said no decisions were reached, but the measure would be considered section by section on Wednesday.

Meanwhile, the sub-committee chairman hopes President Roosevelt will have had time to examine the report and will give his views on it. Scheduled conferences with Kennedy have been twice postponed due to pressing matters.

Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

'Story of the Castles' Is Nostalgic Romance

Astaire and Rogers Star in Film Biography; Maurice Evans Has False Suspicions; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

IT SEEMS TO ME that this exhibition piece ought to be bracketed with "Alexander's Ragtime Band" as one of the most engaging and nostalgic of recent film releases. It goes back to the prewar days, when some of us were struggling in dancing schools to keep up with the new trends being charted by Vernon and Irene Castle.

BELL

There were a great many "hot" tunes in those days that would not be even tepid now. The "One Step," the "Tango," the "Maxixe" and some of the other intricate measures with which we tussled in the talented arms of Angela Chappelear were just coming into vogue and we were all hot and bothered lest the tricky steps might throw us for a loss. Heigho!

That was all a very long time ago, as the crow flies. It was 'way back in 1911-1915, to be exact, and to have it brought back so vividly to life by a biographical film is a little in the nature of a galvanizing experience.

What we are talking about is "The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle," the new RKO-Radio production that was previewed by a quorum of the ladies and gentlemen (sic) of the press yesterday afternoon, under the equally nostalgic auspices of Manager Hardie Meakin, of RKO-Keith's Theater, where the picture will be shown following the current engagement of Deanna Durbin and her associates in "Three Smart Girls Grow Up."

"The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle" goes back to the Lew Fields stage production of "The Hen Pecks," in 1911, for its genesis. Vernon Castle, then, was a comedy stooge for Lew Fields in a barbershop scene that was the precursor of the sort of thing Eddie Cantor and George LeMaire did later in the Ziegfeld "Follies." Mr. Castle was mauled all over the place by Mr. Fields and never did a dance step in the whole show. I know this to be true, because I witnessed a performance of "The Hen Pecks," in the Broadway Theater, New York, when Mr. Castle was taking his beating and Lew Fields was otherwise supported by Blossom Seeley, Laura Burt and a large cast of other experts in musical fol-de-rol. "The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle" brought all this back with strange vividness yesterday.

And those tunes they played for the singers to sing and the dancers to dance to! One of the most prominent of them was "Too Much Mustard," the syncopated number to the strains of which the Castles scored their first hit in Paris. "Too Much Mustard" also was the hit tune played at the opening of the Raleigh Hotel Roof, 'way back yonder, when Daniel Breeskin was sawing a first fiddle in Schroeder's overheated orchestra! Dan Breeskin, in case you had forgotten, came along to be the foremost conductor of motion picture theater orchestras the Capital ever has been able to boast. That "Too Much Mustard" was a torrid introduction to him.

But that is getting considerably away from the fact that "The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle" is a film of high merit. It traces two glamorous careers with accuracy and fidelity and discloses Ginger Rogers as an emotional actress of greater power than she has been given credit for being heretofore. There is not quite so much dancing as you might expect in the film, but what there is is skillfully done, as goes without saying, and brings back to mind the creativeness and unique ability of a dancing duo that never has been paralleled in the theater or out since Vernon Castle lost his life in the plane crash at Fort Worth, Tex. That, incidentally, is the closing episode of the picture.

Perhaps it isn't wise to be able to hark back so many years for one's memories of the theaters and the ballrooms. My appraisal of "The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle" may be prejudiced by too keen a memory of everything it depicts. There probably will be a considerable number of others in the same boat.

Mr. Meakin, at his previews, also goes in for double-feature bills. Thus yesterday afternoon we were regaled first with Walt Disney's Technicolor cartoon comedy of "Goofy and Wilbur," the tragic tale of a dog and a grasshopper, if you can imagine any such thing. It is a very choice bit of comedy executed in the typical Disney manner—which means the best manner there is in the creation of such whimsies. When, if ever, "Goofy and Wilbur" is to be shown, I would not know. But whenever it is, it will be worth looking at for its sheer absurdity.

And was I shocked!

I mean when Maurice Evans, during the course of a pleasant chat backstage, following Tuesday night's performance of "Hamlet," at the National, remarked that he had read between the lines of The Post's review on Tuesday morning that we had been slightly "shocked" by the sharp breaking with tradition revealed in his full-text version of the Bard's greatest play.

I had not been shocked before, but I was then. The present "Hamlet," to my obscured manner of thinking, is the most completely revelatory of Shakespeare's intent in writing the play that Washington ever has been privileged to enjoy. During its four-hour length it makes transparently clear every nuance that the genius of Avon wrote into his original Elizabethan script. As I had hoped I had made clear in Monday night's hurried resume of the play, Maurice Evans' interpretation of it clarifies the tragedy until it becomes almost a modern melodrama of a young man seeking revenge for grievous wrongs.

One of the chief merits of this "Hamlet" is that it is played exactly as Shakespeare wrote it, without any resort to fantastic methods of stagecraft. Mr. Evans is quite clear on this point.

"It is only necessary," he says, "to present 'Hamlet' as it was written for the Elizabethans to make it an utterly comprehensible play. Shakespeare wrote in speeches that cover the time needed for all entrances and exits and the whole formula of the drama is so simple that in its complete version it cannot miss.

"Usually 'Hamlet' has been reserved as the piece de resistance of ageing actors who have tackled it as a final fillip to their illustrious careers. It really is a young man's play and that is the manner and the mood in which we are offering it."

That is precisely what we tried to convey in Tuesday morning's review. If we failed, it just goes to show what can happen to a harried fellow with only 40 minutes of writting time at a crowded midnight hour.

To make the matter as unequivocal and conclusive as possible, we wish to go on record here and now that Mr. Evans is presenting the most illuminating, most easily understandable and most thoroughly enjoyable "Hamlet" the National Capital ever has seen.

And I wonder what he will read between the lines of this?

Blind Archery

Humphrey Bogart has introduced blind archery to Hollywood. A target is laid flat on the ground and the arrow is shot straight into the air. Archers must gauge wind resistance, deflection and the arrow's arc in turning to fall to earth.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., April 26.—Was treated to a hot dog on the "Winter Carnival" set by Richard Carlson, who was kidnaped from "Stars In Your Eyes" on Broadway, to play opposite Ann Sheridan. He was awfully set up because they held the plane for him, but said, "Gosh, I felt important. But discovered I really wasn't. They held it because Leland Hayward, my manager, is on the board of directors of TWA."

HOPPER

Which reminded me of Leland's father, who is Col. William Hayward. He headed the colored regiment in the late war, then married rich Mrs. Plant—Phil's mother. She traded her Fifth avenue home which now houses Cartier's, for a string of pearls. Son Leland was jumping from job to job like a grasshopper, and the Colonel was quite worried when he finally lit in the unstable motion picture business. But now he's oozing with pride. Because Leland's made more money than he ever dreamed of, and gave him Margaret Sullavan for a daughter, and two grandchildren.

Watched Sam Goldwyn fill up his "Hurricane" lagoon, for "The Real Glory" with Gary Cooper, Donald Crisp and David Niven trying out their native make-up, to see if it would match. And not a sarong in sight or sound!

We've said it before, and we repeat, Sonja Henie's one of the sweetest and shrewdest girls of our business. She's including a rhumba and tango on skates in her "Second Fiddle" picture for the South American trade. Incidentally, her handwriting is like an etching. Perfection is the word. And the report that she's having an undercover romance with Addison Randall is not only vicious, but untrue. She met him once—only. Addison is very much interested elsewhere—and how! Sonja's been beaued about by Vic Orsatti, who's managed her ever since she arrived. Theirs is a lasting friendship.

Wonder if June Lang doesn't regret divorcing Vic? Her rise to stardom hasn't been so rapid without him. It will be interesting if brother Frank Orsatti will find jobs for Jean Chatburn now that they've parted. Having an agent in the family is almost as good as marrying a producer, you know.

There's been so much undercurrent feeling on "The Old Maid" set between Miriam Hopkins and Bette Davis that Director Eddie Goulding has put into effect his own method of curing it. When he senses a temperamental outbreak he throws one that puts the rest of the company to shame. And they run for shelter.

Both Warner's and Paul Muni are very worried over "Juarez." If they leave in the magnificent scenes of Brian Aherne, he'll get more attention than Muni. And if they cut them out it will hurt the picture, because he does most of them with Bette Davis. Yes, sir, they have a problem.

Cesar Romero gets better in each picture. Did a swell job in "The Return of the Cisco Kid." His girl friends call him "Butch." Warner Baxter's role didn't seem as colorful as the original. Herbert Leeds did a fine job with the material handed him.

Amanda Duff told her father who knows nothing about the picture business, that she was going into the next Motor picture. "My, my, that's a silly name for a star," he said.

Bill Desmond's not letting any grass grow under his feet. While waiting for a break, he's coaching a dramatic class in a private school in Glendale.

Unusual Film Star Avoids Broadway

In refusing definite offers to star in Broadway plays, James Cagney has made it clear he prefers Hollywood motion pictures to the New York stage.

Cagney was wanted for "Of Mice and Men," one of New York's greatest hits, but politely refused the bid. Recently, he has been asked to consider two other scripts as Broadway starring vehicles. His answer is still the same.

"I'm cured of Broadway now," he says. "I think pictures do everything much better."

Cagney will do two more films at Warners after he finishes "Each Dawn I Die." Then he will vacation—at Martha's Vineyard—not on Broadway.

Horse Insists on Introduction First

Just as William McGann was starting to direct a scene for "Gantry the Great," the story of the blind wonder horse, a terrific commotion was heard in a nearby box-stall.

"Hey," roared McGann, "how can we shoot with that racket going on. Somebody stop it."

A Negro stableman came rushing up, concern in his voice.

"Sorry, boss," he told McGann. "Can't nothing be done about it 'cept take that blind Gantry horse to that paddock and introduce 'em. That fellow that's making all the rumpus is Top Row, the old boy himself. And he don't like strange horses on the ranch unless he's met 'em."

The 15-year-old blind bay was led to the stall which housed one of America's greatest race horses. A couple of snorts sniffs and whinnies and a new friendship was made.

"Heck, horses are worse than kids in pictures," McGann was heard to mutter.

"I Married an Angel" Retains Original Cast; Other New Programs

"I MARRIED AN ANGEL," the musical comedy which held a leading spot on Broadway for a year, finally arrives on the stage of the National next week with its original company intact. Vera Zorina, Vivienne Segal, Dennis King, Walter Slezak, Audrey Christie and Charles Walters handle the leading songs and dances, interspersing the amazement white-winged Zorina creates on her arrival from heaven as a gift for Banker King. The music and lyrics are by Rogers and Hart and, besides the title song, include among many numbers, "With a Twinkle in Your Eye" and "At the Roxy Music Hall." Producer Dwight Deere Wiman has given the musical an opulent production, with settings by Joe Mielziner and a ballet under the direction of George Balanchine, Miss Zorina's husband. Opens Monday evening for one week only, with Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

Earle

"DARK VICTORY." Bette Davis as a young society girl whose selfishness gives way to courage when tragedy enters her life. Also in the cast are George Brent, Geraldine Fitzgerald, Henry Travers, Ronald Reagan and Cora Witherspoon. On the stage, Marion Talley, once of the Metropolitan Opera and now of the air waves, will offer a group of songs in a variety revue that includes William and Joe Mandel, comedians; Shayne and Armstrong, dancers; the 16 Earle Roxyettes and the "Find of the Month," Iris Wayne, who offers some new dances. The film opens this morning at 10 o'clock and, for today only, the Earle will be without a stage show. The new stage revue will observe the regular Friday opening, however, and will make its bow tomorrow.

Capitol

"THE LADY'S FROM KENTUCKY." Of course, this one is a racing picture and the leading roles are assumed by George Raft, Ellen Drew, ZaSu Pitts and Hugh Herbert. It is described as a light-hearted comedy and was directed by Alexander Hall. The big news at the Capitol, however, is the stage appearance of Jessica Dragonette, whose soprano voice for years has been one of radio's leading attractions. Recently Miss Dragonette has been appearing on the concert stage and this engagement marks her first vaudeville appearance. Saul Grauman and his "Musical Stairatone," which seems to be a sort of oversized piano on which his girl chorus dances, is the other leading stage attraction. Opens tomorrow.

RKO-Keith's

"THREE SMART GIRLS GROW UP." The latest Deanna Durbin musical film enters its third week on Fifteenth street, with the youthful star mending the broken romances of her two sisters, remembered from their first film, "Three Smart Girls." Charles Winninger, Nan Grey, Helen Parrish, Robert Cummings, William Lundigan and Ernest Cossaft have other leading roles.

Palace

"WUTHERING HEIGHTS." This is another holdover of a highly successful film. Merle Oberon and Laurence Olivier have the leading roles in the screen version of Emily Bronte's Yorkshire novel. The strange story of the Gypsy, Heathcliff, and his tragic love for the flashing Cathy enlists a prominent cast, including David Niven, Flora Robson, Geraldine Fitzgerald, Hugh Williams and Miles Mander.

Metropolitan

"DODGE CITY." The Technicolor epic of the Old West, with Errol Flynn as the righteous sheriff, remains to complete its third downtown week. Other inhabitants of the tough cattle town include Olivia de Haviland, Ann Sheridan, Bruce Cabot, Frank McHugh, Alan Hale, John Litel, Henry Travers, Henry O'Neill, Victor Jory, William Lundigan and Guinn (Big Boy) Williams.

Columbia

"MIDNIGHT." Packed with stars, this light-hearted Cinderella tale of an American girl who runs into amazingly good fortune and a surprising grandmother in Paris, returns for a third downtown week. Claudette Colbert, Don Ameche, John Barrymore, Francis Lederer, Mary Astor, Hedda Hopper, Rex O'Malley and Elaine Barrie have the leading roles. Opens tomorrow.

Trans-Lux

"JAPAN, MASTER OF THE ORIENT." The latest "March of Time" concerns the growing Empire of the East and is the principal short at the newsreel theater. A "Screen Snapshots" introduces Bing Crosby, Basil Rathbone and Constance Bennett. Walt Disney's "Society Dog Show" is also on the program, which features 35 minutes of the latest newsreels. Opens tomorrow.

Mount Vernon

OPEN-AIR AUTO THEATER. Tonight Ginger Rogers and William Powell will be the stars in the auto theater's new bill, "Star of Midnight," which will continue through Saturday. Sunday, Victor McLaglen and Boris Karloff costar in "Lost Patrol" through Wednesday night.

Civic Theater

"THERE'S ALWAYS JULIET." The Civic Theater opens tonight in the last production of its season, John van Druten's comedy. Director F. Cowles Strickland is presenting his cast in the comedy tomorrow and Saturday nights as well as next week-end.

Glen Echo

THE AMUSEMENT PARK reports increasing crowds with the sunny skies and starry nights. The Midway House of Fun, the Dodgem rides and the coaster dips are drawing their usual admirers and, in the ballroom, Herbie Holmes and his band of 14 play for dancing from 9 to midnight, Sundays excepted.

Gayety

JUNE ST. CLAIRE. The star of the new production at the burlesque house will be June St. Claire, making her Eastern debut Sunday afternoon after a colorful career on the West Coast. The California blond will share honors with Betty Duval, a Southern beauty. Billy Foster and Joe Young handle the comedy situations.

Impersonate a Great Dancing Duo

GINGER ROGERS AND FRED ASTAIRE as they appear, in inverse order, in the title roles of "The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle," next attraction on the screen at RKO-Keith's Theater. This RKO-Radio production is expected to open on Fifteenth street a week from today—provided Deanna Durbin, in "Three Smart Girls Grow Up," decides to move on by that time. The story of the Castles is an interesting and nostalgic one

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, April 26.

"BABE" WARBURTON, one of the most popular ladies of the Palm Beach set, was visited by a Washington official whose name often had been linked with hers . . . "Look, I've got a ticket for speeding," Miss Warburton greeted. "I'm so glad you've come—because you can fix it for me" . . . "I can't fix any traffic tickets," the official assured. "I took an oath to uphold the law—not to assist in breaking it. Sorry" . . . Miss Warburton telephoned a local police officer, who fixed the ticket for her. A few weeks later the social columns announced her engagement to another man—although this story may have had nothing to do with it . . . But the man who couldn't fix a traffic ticket was Frank Murphy, United States Attorney General!

HENRI BERNSTEIN, the French playwright who is visiting here, will offer for public sale a collection of the portraits of himself painted by Renoir and other famous French artists . . . Edmund Wilson's poem regarding "The Life of Archibald MacLeish," which was published in the New Yorker, has had repercussions. MacLeish once studied law. An out-of court settlement is being arranged . . . Tim Mara, owner of the New York football Giants and who runs the largest book at the local race track, is being picked for a $48,000 sales tax assessment by the city officials . . . Arthur Kober, the playwright, is at Mount Sinai Hospital.

SAM GOLDWYN was very much interested in purchasing the screen rights to John Steinbeck's new book, "The Grapes of Wrath" . . . He wanted Lillian Hellman, the author of "The Little Foxes," to read the book for him and report upon its screen possibilities . . . Goldwyn, who believes that Miss Hellman is too much of a liberal, therefore wired her: "If Stalin doesn't mind, would you read 'Grapes of Wrath' for me?" . . . Lillian immediately wired in reply: "Moscow says it's okay for me to read the book—but not for nothing."

ONE OF THE REASONS why Franchot Tone is quitting the Group Theater after his current engagement is the fact that he's receiving the top Group salary—$200 a week. And Franchot has invested $35,000 in Group productions . . . Lou Nova visited El Morocco Sunday evening, but ordered training-table food brought to his plate. "I'll be all right against Max Baer," he confessed, "if I can keep away from him the first two rounds" . . . Congressman Lex Green, of Florida, has decided to oppose Senator Andrews for the Senatorial nomination next year . . . The Musicians Union and Grover Whalen will announce their final World's Fair settlement on Friday.

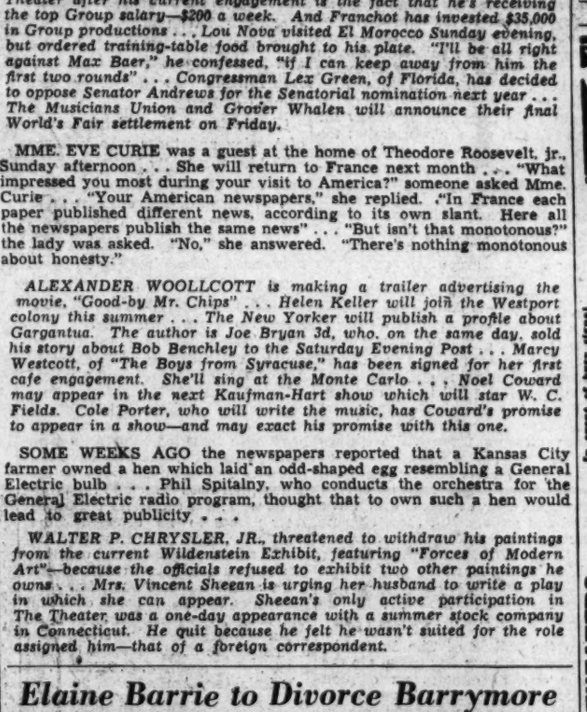
MME. EVE CURIE was a guest at the home of Theodore Roosevelt, jr., Sunday afternoon . . . She will return to France next month . . . "What impressed you most during your visit to America?" someone asked Mme. Curie . . . "Your American newspapers," she replied. "In France each paper published different news, according to its own slant. Here all the newspapers publish the same news" . . . "But isn't that monotonous?" the lady was asked. "No," she answered. "There's nothing monotonous about honesty."

ALEXANDER WOOLLCOTT is making a trailer advertising the movie, "Good-by Mr. Chips" . . . Helen Keller will join the Westport colony this summer . . . The New Yorker will publish a profile about Gargantua. The author is Joe Bryan 3d, who, on the same day, sold his story about Bob Benchley to the Saturday Evening Post . . . Marcy Westcott, of "The Boys from Syracuse," has been signed for her first cafe engagement. She'll sing at the Monte Carlo . . . Noel Coward may appear in the next Kaufman-Hart show which will star W. C. Fields. Cole Porter, who will write the music, has Coward's promise to appear in a show—and may exact his promise with this one.

SOME WEEKS AGO the newspapers reported that a Kansas City farmer owned a hen which laid an odd-shaped egg resembling a General Electric bulb . . . Phil Spitalny, who conducts the orchestra for the General Electric radio program, thought that to own such a hen would lead to great publicity . . .

WALTER P. CHRYSLER, JR., threatened to withdraw his paintings from the current Wildenstein Exhibit, featuring "Forces of Modern Art"—because the officials refused to exhibit two other paintings he owns . . . Mrs. Vincent Sheean is urging her husband to write a play in which she can appear. Sheean's only active participation in The Theater was a one-day appearance with a summer stock company in Connecticut. He quit because he felt he wasn't suited for the role assigned him—that of a foreign correspondent.

Elaine Barrie to Divorce Barrymore



John Barrymore confirmed reports last night in St. Louis that his fourth wife, Elaine Barrie, would divorce him, and explained "We're just two people who didn't hit it off together." The couple, who were married two and half years ago, were seen on the stage here last month. He said they had decided to part as friends

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

By International News Service.

Hollywood, April 26.—Julie Haydon, who lost out in the movies a few years ago because of her too marked resemblance to Ann Harding, is testing at Warners'. Julie is back in town after having achieved a triumph on Broadway in "Shadow and Substance," and Henry Blanke is directing her in scenes from her stage hit as a test for Hal Wallis. But it isn't "Shadow and Substance" that Hal has in mind for Miss Haydon.

LOUELLA PARSONS

She will be starred in "Outward Bound," which was revived on the New York stage with great success. It has the same spiritual quality as "Shadow and Substance," and should be a very good vehicle for the blonde, rather ethereal, Haydon girl. Interesting that she seems to have lost her resemblance to Ann Harding, just as Laurence Oliver lost his to Ronald Colman, after a few years away from Hollywood.

Paul Mantz took a plane down to Guayamas, Mexico, today to bring Richard Barthelmess back to town. He has been deep sea fishing off J. Cheever Cowdin's boat. Dick had no idea what was happening until Jessie telephoned him the good news of the ovation given him at the preview of "Plane No. 4." The preview cards were so enthusiastic that Harry Cohn decided then and there to build up Dick's part and to take some added scenes. Moreover, it is entirely possible that he will be signed for other Columbia pictures. I don't know any news that has given me more pleasure for it carries out my contention that the old favorites cannot lose their popularity over night.

Pandro Berman believes he has another Walter Brennan in John S. Hamilton, who created Kandy on the stage in "Of Mice and Men." Just how realistic this Hamilton was when his dog had to be shot is best attested by Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks, sr., who rushed out of the theater in tears and couldn't see the rest of the show, she was so overcome. Hamilton, who played the one-armed ranch hand whose one ambition was to have a home of his own, will make his debut as one of the characters in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and it will be interesting to see if he fulfills Pandro's hopes for him.

Rumor is hot and heavy that Robert Florey, motion picture director who left here March 28, is being detained in France and the government has refused permission for him to leave the country until the war scare blows over. Florey, who has made some of Paramount's best comedies, is, of course, a French citizen and subject to the laws of his country. Paris admitted today they had received no word from him and naturally they are alarmed since he is due back soon to report for a new picture. His friends in Hollywood are worried, for most of them remember the unfortunate experiance of cameraman Lucien Andriot, who innocently returned to France for a visit only to be clamped in jail for not reporting for military service.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Dorothy Lee and her former husband, Marshall Duffield, at the La Maze, proving that even ex's can be the most devoted friends. Wonder why she and Marsh left in such a hurry? Norma Talmadge in the smartest gown at the "Juarez" preview, stopping to talk to her former husband, Joseph Schenck, who is still her financial advisor; John Garfield, very handsome in that new tuxedo, at the La Conga with his bride; Paulette Goddard at the Versailles in company with Douglas Montgomery; Marie Wilson in lace cape and lace mitts, attracting more than passing atention at the preview; Jinks Falkenberg, out of the hospital, at Marcels with Bob Taplinger in a big party; Louise Fazenda, many pounds thinner, with Hal Wallis, who was relaxing after the excitement of the "Juarez" opening; Mrs. Jack Warner, who has been sicker than her friends realized, was unable to attend the preview at the last minute. But Jack entertained the Sam Goldwyns, the Hal Roaches and a few others at the theater.

Mrs. Richard Barthelmess, like a 16-year-old when word came to her of Dick's good work in "Plane Number 4"; Heather Thatcher, cute as she could be, doing one of those new single file dances which we saw for the first time at Marcels; Joan Bennett and Walter Wanger night clubbing with the Ben Finneys after the big preview. Wish Joanie would go blond again. I don't like her dark hair with the two light streaks in front; Geraldine Fitzgerald, come what may, leaves next week for two months in her native Dublin; Baron Roland von Ergenstadt, who was assistant managing director for Earl Carroll, died today following a major operation; Jan Kiepura and Marta Eggerth stowing away their favorite Hungarian dishes at Little Hungary; Jackie Cooper has a date with his M. D. to get rid of his tonsils.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Fireproof Shrubs Latest Film Trick

Demands of a heavily lighted and foliaged set built for "Never Say Die" have led Paramount greensmen to an invention which may revolutionize the studio nursery business, A. C. Zoulis, chief engineer, has revealed.

Chief problem of green set dressing long has been curling and fading leaves, Zoulis said. This has been eliminated by the new substance which has a resin base.

The new mixture also is expected to make stage shrubbery fireproof.

Little

Don't take "Pearls of the Crown" too seriously. It is only Sacha Guitry's delightfully haphazard thoughts about the adventures of seven pearls, four of which have wound up in the crown of England. The Little Theater is holding it over for a second, witty week.

While M. Guitry does wander through 400 years and three languages to tell his rambling romance, he achieves a semblance of unity through a trio of interlocutors, the most loquacious of which is himself. He depicts the pearl's original discovery and their presentation by Clement VII to his niece, Catherine de Medici, on her wedding day. It takes Queen Victoria to discover them in the hiding place chosen by Elizabeth after four of them had come to her on Mary Stuart's death.

Now, of course, this may all be Guitry fables, but it is undeniably amusing to find a wily Abyssinian queen distrustful of Italians, to discover a family heirloom crushed to bits as a paste gem and to watch the last of the pearls fall off the Normandie through the churning waters right back into an oyster. Fundamentally, his history, of course, is next to accurate, but the Frenchman is not setting out to teach a classroom lesson. While the use of English, French and Italian is of enormous interest to a student of languages, the real fascination of the film comes from forgetting strict rules and settling back to some intelligent diversion.

Guitry plays four of the roles, ranging from Francis I to a passenger on the Normandie and his most recent wife, Jacqueline Delubac, trips through three parts.

Harassed Gallinger

It is a matter of keen regret that the agreement with respect to Gallinger Hospital, reached a few weeks ago between the Health Department and the Washington medical schools, is not functioning smoothly. But the assumption that conditions at the hospital are such as to call for a Congressional investigation seems unwarranted.

Gallinger has already been investigated by two House groups this year and another inquiry by the Senate sub-committee on District appropriations is scheduled. With one investigation piling upon another, the public service rendered by the hospital is unavoidably impaired. Officials obliged to spend so much of their time explaining policies and justifying actions cannot possibly give the routine administration of the hospital the close attention it requires.

Representative Nichols now proposes a Senate-House inquiry to iron out the dispute between Health Officer Ruhland and the medical schools. There is no question as to where the final responsibility for the treatment of patients at Gallinger lies. Dr. Ruhland has insisted that the Health Department retain actual control, although the resident physicians at the hospital are subject to the general rules formulated under supervision of the visiting staff heads. That compromise arrangement might work out satisfactorily, if the hospital management were given a chance to iron out cases of friction free from outside interference.

Before Congress attempts to intervene in the controversy it should certainly have more accurate information than was relayed by Mr. Nichols to newspaper reporters. It seems that the nurse to whom Mr. Nichols referred did not die of a punctured heart, as he implied, but from infection which sapped her strength in spite of competent medical care. The death occurred nine days after the patient was operated on for an infected abscess. Moreover, there was complete consultation between the visiting physician who placed the patient under observation and the resident physician who performed the operation.

It is surprising that the facts of this case were not carefully ascertained before using it as evidence of need for another investigation of Gallinger. The problem there is difficult enough without exaggeration of the issues.

Coup At La Paz

For years Bolivia has been suffering from the evil effects of militarism. The military were in no small measure responsible for getting that country into the suicidal Chaco war which broke out in 1932. They kept that war going for three ruinous years. As a result, Bolivia was bled white. But having saddled themselves on the nation the military fought every attempt to establish anything resembling civilian control.

In 1936 a military junta overturned the existing government and made Col. David Toro, chief of staff of the army, the provisional president. Fourteen months later, another military coup d'etat led to Toro's overthrow and the assumption of power by Lieut. Col. German Busch. A year ago, after the election of a puppet congress, Busch was formally named "constitutional president." But from the very outset his regime has been plagued by grave political and economic problems.

The political parties, critical of the military dictatorship, have constantly sought a restoration of real constitutional government. At the same time, the decline in the world price of tin, which accounts for 70 per cent of Bolivia's exports, and the increase in the Bolivian cost of production of that metal have enormously aggravated Bolivia's financial and economic difficulties.

President Busch's answer to these problems has now been to do away with the constitution, the congress, the codes of law and the courts and to concentrate all power in his own hands. Bolivia is now a "totalitarian" state. But the label is not to be taken too seriously.

The dictatorship at La Paz, despite its points of resemblance with the regimes obtaining in Berlin and Rome, is simply another variant of the familiar Latin-American pattern of one-man rule. But whether President Busch can perpetuate that rule will depend on Bolivia's economic situation. If it improves, Busch may be able to keep the dissident elements in check; if not his government will suffer the same vicissitudes as those of so many other men on horseback who have crowded the pages of Latin-American history.

More Than A Diplomat

In his first public statement after the announcement of his appointment as British Ambassador to Washington, the Marquis of Lothian emphasized his belief in the idea of "a grand alliance against aggression."

This alone would be evidence, if the fact were not known, that Lord Lothian is no career diplomat. His remarks in London on Tuesday, if taken from their context and ingeniously distorted, could easily be made to appear as a plea for an Anglo-American alliance, against Germany or what-have-you. And there are plenty of Americans who are more than ready to believe that the major mission of the next British Ambassador will be to snare the United States back into the empire, to make Uncle Sam burn his fingers in rescuing British chestnuts, or to dispatch American boys to foreign fields in behalf of Britain's landed gentry. Of these last, incidentally, Lord Lothian is one of the most prominent.

So if the newly-appointed Ambassador had been a professional diplomat he would undoubtedly have dodged all issues in talking to newspaper men at this moment. He would, as a bachelor, have dilated on the charm of American girls. He would have said that his knowledge of Rhodes scholars—he has long been the secretary of the Rhodes Trust—has convinced him that American youth is Olympian in its promise. Possibly, speaking as a career man, he would have been slightly critical of Washington's summer climate. But nothing more.

Lord Lothian, however, is not a diplomat by training. He is a very intelligent, thoughtful, well-informed and alert-minded English gentleman. There are a number of his countrymen to whom these adjectives would apply. What distinguishes the new Ambassador is that he has spent much of his life outside of England and in so doing has learned to think along lines which are philosophic rather than nationalistic in their direction.

It is this fact, added to his more obvious qualifications, which makes this appointment, at this particular juncture of world affairs, particularly interesting. So far as his mission is to report to his government on American attitudes Lord Lothian will do the job admirably, since both by training and by temperament he already understands this country well. So far as his responsibility is to explain British policy to us the new Ambassador should be equally successful. For he is able to do what the career diplomat finds difficult—analyze and dissect a course of policy from the viewpoint of an expert outsider rather than as a bureaucratic and uncritical servant of his government.

Because his coming will mean the departure of Sir Ronald and Lady Lindsay there will be a certain prejudice against Lord Lothian. He will have to overcome, locally, the totally unreasonable but nevertheless real reaction which will inevitably associate him with the loss to Washington of his very popular predecessor. But before long, it may be predicted, that prejudice will give way to admiration for what the new Ambassador represents.

For this is something bigger, even, than the British Empire. It is not merely as envoy for that government that the new Ambassador must be defined. He stands, rather, for the preservation of the liberal spirit, for the tolerant way of life, which both Great Britain and the United States share as a joint heritage. And to preserve this against aggression "a grand alliance" of all who believe in democratic theory is already in operation.

In his career Lord Lothian has made mistakes. He very likely will make more of them during his tenure here. He is the type of active personality which would rather take chances than be eternally correct and meaningless. But when the mistakes are forgotten the real mission of this man will be remembered. For long before Lord Lothian was named Ambassador to Washington he had made himself an envoy plenipotentiary for those ideals of democratic liberty, of human progress, of freedom as opposed to absolutism, to which men may adhere and for which men will fight, regardless of the flag they serve.

The Archbishop-Elect

No greater mark of confidence could be placed upon the abilities and personality of an American prelate than his appointment as head of the archdiocese of New York, probably the richest and certainly one of the most important in the modern world. The honor bestowed upon Bishop Francis J. Spellman is, however, doubly impressive because, as auxiliary of the Boston archdiocese, he might have seemed a logical successor to William Cardinal O'Connell.

The career of Bishop Spellman is indicative of the steadily increasing influence of American churchmen in the affairs of the church at large. He was the first American to serve in the Papal Secretariat of State, commonly considered the world's foremost school of diplomacy. His success was both rapid and remarkable. Toward the end of his service at the Vatican, Mgr. Spellman received from the late Pope Pius XI a most extraordinary testimonial of confidence.

The pontiff had completed his now famous encyclical condemning the Fascist encroachments upon the concerns of the church, but feared that the text, if published in Italy, would be suppressed or distorted by the government. To Mgr. Spellman was entrusted the difficult and, as it proved, dangerous mission of carrying the encyclical secretly across the Italian border. The text in Mgr. Spellman's translation was triumphantly given to the world from the Associated Press office in Paris.

Another thing illustrated by the appointment is the strong and successful effort of a church which represents the oldest and most carefully conserved tradition of the Western World, to keep its leadership fully abreast of the age, and especially of its technological innovations. In practical matters Bishop Spellman is, for all his learning, piety and humility, a thorough modern and among his many distinctions is that of being a licensed air pilot.

There is no doubt that he will prove a most able administrator of an archdiocese made into a model of efficiency by the late Patrick Cardinal Hayes. Nor is there much doubt that the new Archbishop of New York will, like three of his four immediate predecessors, be elevated to the Sacred College.

Federal Works Agency

Issuance of the President's reorganization order providing among other things for establishment of a Federal Works Agency raises a question as to the fate of the Byrnes bill providing for a merger of various public works agencies under a single head.

Some of the purposes which that measure was designed to achieve may be accomplished by the executive order. But the very important provisions of the bill relating to State contributions to work relief projects and allocation among the States of Federal funds could not be included. Furthermore, by maintaining both the PWA and the WPA as separate organizations headed by high salaried commissioners the President's plan runs counter to the Byrnes proposal to merge these two agencies.

To be sure, co-ordination between the new PWA and WPA is facilitated since the heads of both agencies will be subject to orders of the Federal Works administrator. It would seem, however, that the arguments in favor of a single work relief agency on the ground that it would be more efficient and more economical, remain valid. It is extremely difficult, indeed virtually impossible, to foresee the effect of the President's order upon the scope and character of the work relief program because so much depends upon the amount appropriated to finance projects and the extent to which Congress assumes responsibility for allocating funds.

A change in the organizational relationships of the Government agencies brought together to form the Federal Works Agency does not obviate the need for other features of the Byrnes bill, notably the provision requiring States to defray at least one-third the total cost of all work relief projects within their borders.

The Byrnes bill also forbids allocation of funds to finance the projects of other Government departments. Thus in various ways it establishes safeguards against dissipation of money in futile or demoralizing boondoggling activities.

It seems unfortunate that the President's order contemplates a shift of the National Youth Administration and the CCC to the new Federal Security Agency instead of leavng them under the supervision of the work relief authorities. While the shift may be justified on logical grounds, there is some danger that more emphasis will be placed upon the welfare aspects of the NYA and the CCC in the new environment than in the present setting. It is most important that the training for useful employment of the youth of the land shall be stressed. While that may be done as well under the supervision of a Federal Security administrator as under a Federal Works administrator, one feels less assurance that such will be the case.

Only a few of the unsolved problems awaiting the administrator of Federal works have been touched upon, and those relate solely to work relief activities embraced by the new agency. To make certain that the new administrative setup will function better than the existing one, Congress should consider certain constructive proposals of the Byrnes bill which have not been made less necessary by the President's action.

'It's The Electricity'

From the London Times.

The good looks of the average young American girl may be due partly to her tremendous vitality and partly to her instinctive flair for wearing becoming clothes. Whatever the reason, the result is very happy. Nor will you long be able to withstand the friendly smiles of the American young man, who moves, like his sister, with an agility and a grace that remind us of our own advanced age. Besides, there do not seem to be any old people in America. The electricity in the air keeps them all buoyant and bouncing about till they are well over 90.

Contradiction?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

As a preamble to the following remarks, I wish to state that I have been an avid reader of Miss Thompson's column ever since she has been writing for your paper; also, that I will contribute to the best of my means to the care of the 20,000 children overseas, now under discussion.

A Government official has recently said that Miss Thompson is a good writer, but that she covers too many fields. I fear that that is beginning to be true.

It seems to me that not so long ago she was standing shoulder to shoulder with Mrs. Sanger in her birth-control bill, and I feel convinced that the propaganda for birth control is the cause of the falling off in birth rate in this country; yet, now, in favor of the Wagner-Rogers bill, she states that in a few years this will be a country of old people, because the death rate is out of proportion to the birth rate.

What a commentary! That we should practice birth control, a practice abused by hundreds of thousands, while being obliged to import our younger generation! Supose these importations should, in course of time, forget that in their own lands their parents were rewarded for giving birth to children, and should, themselves, decide to practice birth control. How easy, when the romance of married life has passed, to send overseas for a foreign child to be adopted in the name of mercy; when, in Miss Thompson's own town, I venture to say, there are many times over 20,000 American-born children who would like nothing better than to be adopted into good homes, with the privilege of seeing their own parents upon occasion.

Will not these foreign-born children, when adopted in America, feel the urge after a few years to be with their own blood relatives? Very likely when that time arrives, these young people will send for their parents to come to America. If they did not feel thus they would hardly be worthy citizens of America.

Miss Thompson especially stresses the impressionability of the age of the imported children. She is right: Their minds will be indelibly impressed with the brutality and hardship which they and their parents have endured; and, thus, through their hatred of dictators, many of them may very well come to hate all forms of restraint, and so become fine material for agitators.

If Miss Thompson wishes to push the limelight aside during this period of hysteria, let her start a campaign at home, to care for our own, to raise funds for the young married couples, so that they can bear their own children without fear of the frightful expense.

Miss Thompson is too valuable a person to go off at a tangent and to be swayed by emotion. Charity begins at home. Let our own thousands of children be adopted, let our own young wives have children; and if the birth rate is so low, put a premium on the newly born. If we cannot take care of our own, God help the future. M. D.

Recreation in D. C.

I have read with much interest your very courteous and much appreciated editorial in The Post of April 24 in regard to co-ordinating recreation in the District of Columbia. Trees

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Countless public-spirited citizens in the Eleventh, Thirteenth and Eighteenth streets sectors near Florida avenue northwest deplore the ruthless chopping down of stately trees in the neighborhood.

As these trees grew year by year, many persons would consciously or unconsciously measure their own progress by the wholesome growth of these patient guardians. Growing children, without playgrounds in these neighborhoods, would play beneath these trees and be happy for nature's gift amid a world that too often forgets growing children and trees. Older folk in these communities remember some little heart-warming event in their lives which took place when a limb or so on a nearby tree first quickened to the will to live and thrust an eager twig toward the sun of a returning spring.

All poetic fancy aside, I readily see the need for certain progressive steps which must be taken to facilitate the rush of traffic bearing more fortunate citizens to and from their spacious homes in outlying communities. But I fail to see one step taken in the direction of our "total civic advancement" by the denial of other citizens those little things which can be such a precious bit of beauty, happiness and inspiration—though those things may be only a row upon row of trees that have lived and grown with these citizens through the years!

Apologies To The Times

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The Post delivery boy asked me the other day to express an opinion about your newspaper. I am therefore happy to do so now and frankly state that as a New Yorker who clung to the New York Times for the past 12 years, I find The Washington Post more stimulating and more versatile than the famous New York daily.

The superiority of The Post over the New York Times is chiefly to be found in the editorial policy of the two newspapers. In a world such as we live in today, where conflict rages between dictatorship and democracy, tyranny and tolerance, it is gratifying to find your newspaper consistently on the side of democracy. The Washington Post gives new vitality and power to democratic institutions, and is developing a reading public able to think constructively on the lines of democratic ideals.

The New York Times is too academic and restrained in its editorials. It is cautious to a point of being conservative. It is hesitant and evasive on many controversial issues. In other words, it isn't an aggressive champion of American democracy.

The Washington Post, I believe, is giving to democracy a great source of strength, a citizenry reared in the concrete practices of democratic living. DAVID I. BLOOM.

Can Stay Out

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

According to Mr. Roosevelt's own conviction he "committed suicide" by jumping off the platform which brought him into power because he had planned it that way;" and now says that if those who built the platform do not wish to follow him in the muddy water into which he has been leading them, they can stay out. Methodism

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

The article in The Post of Sunday, the 23d, on "United Methodism" leaves much unsaid which produces an incomplete picture.

Methodism was a movement with no idea of its growing into a distinct denomination of protestantism, and certainly with no notion that it would be derisively called a "sect." John Wesley and his co-workers paid little attention to credal differences and matters of outward conformity, so long as the spirit of vital Christianity existed in those that worked with them. Their purpose was to deepen personal piety and to simplify as well as popularize religion in the Established Church of England.

Circumstances beyond the control of Wesley and those who believed with him eventually led to what we now know as Methodism in America. Wesley himself did not favor the term "episcopal" to be used in connection with the Methodist movement. The elimination of that term (episcopal) by what will now become united Methodism is a return to original Wesleyism.

The statement that the united church will number approximately 8,000,000 is quite inadequate unless fully understood. This figure does not include children of Methodist parents, nor thousands of adults who have been inducted into Methodism through baptism, but who have not formally related themselves to the church; nor does it include the thousands who have carelessly permitted their names to be dropped from church registers of membership. If all the adults who are found on various church registers in Methodism were added to that vast army of Methodist affiliants, both children and adults, the constituency would reach numerically fully one-fourth of the people of continental United States. J. O. KNOTT.

Diplomacy Secret?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

Many Americans seem amazed that Herr Hitler, on several occasions, has been able to bring Germany to the very brink of war without allowing the German people to realize their true position. Only after the Munich crisis, it is reported, did the man in the Berlin street comprehend how close Germany had been to a conflict. Only after the seizure of Czecho-Slovakia did he realize that non-Germans were being absorbed by the Greater Reich. And probably today few Germans appreciate the true state of their foreign relations.

And yet, many of these same Americans fail to realize that Mr. Roosevelt, in conducting our so-called foreign policy, is pursuing exactly the same tactics. Does any man in the street know what commitments have been made, or are being made, to foreign powers?

Several years ago, Mr. Roosevelt inaugurated his famous fireside talks. Their purpose, he proclaimed, was to acquaint the American people with the course of governmental affairs. The New Deal, he told us, was now "the people's Government," and the people were at last to be told frankly, honestly and with complete candor just what actions and philosophies the Government was adopting.

Just where is that fireplace now? Can it be that the mounting national debt, the persistent decline in business indices and the growing opposition to the Administration's policies have caused the fireplace to be placed in hock?

A democracy is no longer a democracy when one man feels that he and he alone can make it work!

Day-Coach Drama

THE MODERN DAY COACH, with reclining chair supplanting the repining seats the old ones had, is as comfortable as the oldtime Pullmans, and its occupants are twice as interesting as those of modern Pullmans.

Of course Pullmans are fine at night. And many people with chiseling instincts, such as yours truly, day-coach it through the day and live in a sleeper at night. In that way, not only is the Pullman fare saved, but the step-up fare (difference between day-coach-only tickets and those good in Pullmans on payment of Pullman fare) is also saved. That amounts, on most roads, to one-half cent a mile, and on others, a full cent per mile.

The other night, if it hadn't been for the porter's passing the buck to me, I'd have got that porter into trouble. Riding a train westward, I took a berth from Lewistown, Pa., to Massillon, Ohio. Old Jake Coxey's town. As I prepared to clamber to the upper—I prefer uppers because they are lower in price—I intimated in a diplomatic manner that there was more wampum in my pocket for forgetting porters than for remembering ones. I further said porters who didn't call me until actually I reached my back-to-the-day-coach point, fared better than those who jerked my sheet while we were 20 miles out. This boy took me too literally. He let me sleep 25 miles past Massilon. When I got up, he said:

"Git enough sleep, boss? I had a time keepin' 'em from wakin' you at Massilon."

No palm-itching Achates was ever fiduser than that, but I was uneasy. I hurried through my session at the tooth basin and got back to my coach as soon as I could. On his delivery of the luggage at my seat, I booned him with a four-bit piece but was still a bit jumpy. The train conductor had not yet returned my ticket in exchange for the little slip a feller's always afraid he'll lose. Finally the "brains" (railroad slang for conductor) came along, and I flagged him with my little slip. He said:

"Were you in 91?"

"Yep."

"The porter said you asked him not to call you at Massillon."

Well, technically I was correct in denying it. But, reading what was in my heart and what the porter had so clearly understood, he looked at me with as plain a "You're-a-liar" expression as I have ever witnessed in a human optic. But he handed back my ticket and didn't make any effort to collect, although I'd have weakened and paid him if he had pressed the point. For I saw that the porter had had to justify his missing a call for a passenger.

I shaved in the men's lavatory. There was lukewarm water and I got along fine. After I had come, cleanly shaven, from my boudoir, I saw that a man who had day-coached it all night was returning from the smoker, with his shaving kit in hand. I went forward and asked him:

"Did you find a good place to shave, up front?"

"I always wear my shaving place up front," he came back at me.

Putting out a happy hand I said: "Shake, fellow wisecracker. That's the way I make MY living, too."

A strange occurrence marked the forenoon ride from Wooster to Valparaiso.

An old lady of the super-talkative type, who had talked most of the night in a high and penetrating voice, so that all-nighters with the rented pillows told me—called the Crestline-to-Fort Wayne conductor to her and said, in that same short-wave tone:

"Cap'n, I guess mebby I'm in trouble. I checked my carpet-sack last night at Lang-caster, when I got on, an' I put it in my ridicule with a bottle a' roomatiz linimint. Th' cork come loose some time in th' night, an' now that check is a-smellin' o' sassyfras ile sumpin turrible. D'ye reckon I kin git my carpet-sack back, with it?"

The conductor reassured her by telling her that while "the flavor lasts" so far as that roomatiz "liniment" was concerned, it was still competent as a hostage for the precious luggage.

I have day-coached enough to enable me to be unerring about some things. If I have a pencil to sharpen, I look all around the car carefully. I even wander with ostensible aimlessness up and down the aisles. But I am surreptitiously watchful. I am looking for the type of man who would have a penknife in his pocket. Never yet have I failed in picking the right guy. And never yet, by the way, have I found a man with a penknife who did not accompany the loan with a look of pride in his cutlery, but with the absolutely hypocritical apology for it—the usual:

"Well, its a kind of a knife, anyhow."

And when I have typed some letters on the train and want to mail them at the next stop, I stray along the aisles studying physiognomy and garb until I spot a feller who would have stamps in his pocket. I boast another hundred per cent record in picking those. To tell you the details of the two types of man that I seek in such emergencies were too much of a stint. The denning marks are too subtle to describe. There is a finesse in it that beggars mere science. This is written in a day coach with a penknife man and a stamp man in the same car with me. I checked.

Home On The Range

"WE WERE a prehistoric race. We were way behind." It is Teddy Blue Abbott, of the Maginnis Range in central Montana, speaking in "We Pointed Them North" (Farrar & Rinehart, $3), a book of cowboy reminiscences in which the words are Abbott's, but the arrangement is the skillful work of Helena Huntington Smith. And Teddy Blue, who died while his book was in press, aged 79, was led to that remark about the prehistoric cowboy by listening to the rough language in which the gunless Montanans of today indulge.

"Six shooters," he held, "were a great thing for keeping the peace. You wouldn't have any of this calling names and brawling and fighting where every man was wearing a gun in plain sight. And as for that expression about an s-o-b, I never heard it said with a smile, as they say, before the nineties. In the early days men were soft-spoken and respectful to each other, because it didn't pay to be anything else" . . . It's an interesting explanation of the modern vogue for tough language, but it doesn't seem to apply in the international field, where the guns point in the same direction as the barrage of epithets.

Maybe it doesn't explain the etiquette of the cow'oy era, either. Teddy Blue is better at telling what he saw and lived than at expounding a philosophy of American history. He lived through a great legend-breeding period, where the legends grew. He once said of his father-in-law, Granville Stuart, who hanged the cattle rustlers at the mouth of the Musselshell, that "Granville Stuart was the history of Montana." Miss Smith, who took down his stories in the summers of 1937 and 1938, says that Teddy Blue is the history of the cattle trail and the open range.

HE WAS BORN in England, but his father took him to Texas when he was 10 years old, and he helped wrangle a herd north to Nebraska in that same year of 1870. He grew up with range cattle. The farmers were pouring in, however; young Abbott left home for good in 1878, when he was 18, and in the next ten years he saw the whole of the range-cattle business. He ran a herd of beef up on Cheese Creek in the last open range in eastern Nebraska in 1878; he drifted up the Platte River and helped move cattle to the Pine Ridge Indian Agency in South Dakota; he drifted south to Austin, Tex., and came up the Western Trail as a top cowhand with the Print Olive outfit in the spring of '79. He was in Wyoming in 1880, in New Mexico in 1881 and came up the trail again that year and once more in 1883, when he struck Montana, where he stayed.

Those were the days when hundreds of herds, most of them with a couple of thousand cattle in the herd, were wrangled north across half the width of the United States. Some of the beef was shipped east from Dodge City, more was moved north onto the ranges of Wyoming and Montana, just ceasing to be buffalo and Indian country. A dozen men would handle 2,000 animals, and their handling was an art and a science. After you crossed the Red River and got out on the open plains the sun would flash on the horns of a mile-long parade of cattle; ahead and behind you could see the dust of other herds. No orders were given; every man knew his job and did it. Sometimes, in the dry runs to the north, the cattle would smell water and start running; it was a man's job to turn them in and start them milling. No cowboy drank on the job, but when the herd was turned in the little towns saw big times!

Half a million cattle were driven north from Texas to Nebraska in 1883 and 1884, according to Teddy Blue Abbott, who calls those the peak years. Yet, 1895 was the year of the last puny drive—a few hundred animals. The open range was dead—but its traditions still live and glow.

Those days, and his later years on the Yellowstone, the Powder, the Musselshell, the Little Horn and the Judith Rivers, in Montana, Teddy Blue Abbott recalled with the precision of a historian, the picturesque epithet of a cowboy and a rough, good humor all his own. He has no use for romantics or tragedians. He never saw a cowboy with two guns except in the movies, he said, and he never knew a man to be lonely when he had cattle to tend. A man like Pike Landusky might offer his tobacco from a pouch made out of the bladder of an Indian he had killed, and the story would spread across the country and grow in the telling; but the fact is that shooting was frequent and killing uncommon. It was good fun shooting bottles off the bar, but no cowboy really liked seeing his friends drop. The kids were the most dangerous; they were sensitive, and felt they had to prove their valor. Most of the recognized "bad men"—and Teddy Blue knew plenty—were notoriously gentle-mannered.

THE RANGES were fenced in; Abbott filed on a homestead. But he still toted one six-shooter, and lived on the memory of the great days of the range . . . They live again in the book that Helena Huntington Smith wrote for Teddy Blue.

Britain On A War Basis

AS A RELIABLE indication of what the future holds, the decisions taken during the past week within Great Britain are almost certainly more significant than the diplomatic pledges, threats, challenges and inducements which statesmen everywhere are broadcasting. The British government is establishing a ministry of supply, which sounds harmless enough but is in fact the decisive beginning of military control of the British industrial system. It marks the transition from a condition of "business as usual," with armaments as incidental, to a condition of total mobilization, with armaments as the paramount business of the nation. As the inevitable corollary of this, the British are adopting conscription. Thus the industrial plant, the capital resources, the labor and the commerce of the United Kingdom are being regimented for war.

There is a disposition to interpret these revolutionary changes inside of Great Britain as diplomatic gestures designed to influence Hitler's forthcoming speech, or to reassure Britain's new allies. No doubt these considerations have played a part in the timing of Mr. Chamberlain's moves. But it would be a mistake to suppose that they are no more than gestures for immediate effect. What the British are now undertaking to do looks far beyond the immediate moment. These measures are not something improvised for an emergency; they are organization for the long pull. They mean that the British have reached the conviction that at the very best they must face a long period of armed peace, at worst a long war of exhaustion.

Designed To Cover Several Years' Period

THE CONVERSION of the British economy from a civilian to a military basis and the training and equippping of a conscript army cannot be done in a few weeks or even in a few months. As immediate emergency measures no one in Europe would take them seriously. They are measures of organization designed to cover a period of several years. That is why they are so significant.

These new measures show that the British have come to the conclusion that while they may be able to prevent war by combining resistance to aggression with conciliatory offers to the German nation, the basis of a genuine negotiated peace does not now exist. This does not mean that war is inevitable. Almost certainly it is not inevitable. Nor does this mean, either, that no negotiations can be attempted. They will certainly be attempted if Hitler does not slam the door and lock it.

But it does mean that for as long as anyone can now look ahead into the future, verbal pledges are at a discount and that until the credit of pledges has been restored the relative weight of armaments will be the only measure of policy. So the British have decided that whether they face a long war or a long negotiation, they have no choice but to mobilize their whole potential strength.

Invincible Forces Planned By Britain

AS A PRACTICAL matter Great Britain is now undertaking to maintain the greatest navy in Europe, to construct an air force equal to the German, to build air defenses against this German force, to raise an army capable of defending the northern flank of the Maginot line, that is to say, in Belgium and Holland, and to furnish supplies to her allies in central and eastern Europe. This is an immense undertaking, and it can be carried out only by great sacrifices on the part of the British people.

In former days when ware were fought largely by professionals, the easiest way to finance the military requirements was by government borrowing and spending. This produced an inflation which, because it raised the cost of living, reduced the consumption of the masses, which, because it created large war profits, enlisted the business community for the supply of the army. This was always a bad method. It is today an impossible method. A modern nation will not tolerate a war regime which by inflation exploits the poor and enriches the munition industries. Even if it were not ruinously inefficient, it would be so unjust as to ruin the national morale.

The alternative is, in effect, universal conscription under which the government controls the supply of materials and of labor and determines, in accordance with military need, how the supply is to be rationed.

Marks The Finish Of Verbal Formulae

THIS IS THE modern war economy, and Britain's conversion to the conscription of men and the rationing of supplies is one of the most significant events of our time. While it may not mark the end of the policy of diplomatic appeasement, it does mark the end of improvised devices and verbal formulae and unconvincing gestures. Great Britain has gone onto a war basis which is designed to organize the people for a long ordeal.

Even if this change of policy were not necessary on purely military grounds, it would be necessary on psychological grounds. Taking the most optimistic calculation, a long period of acute tension and dangerous crisis is certainly to be expected. It is shattering to the nerves. It is an intolerable burden to carry on normal activities when every hour of the day there is some new disturbance headlined in the newspapers or announced over the radio. The reason why the British have in recent months been the most jittery of all the European peoples is that the unending series of crises has been a personal crisis for every Englishman.

Under such conditions conscription and regimentation are a great relief to men's nerves; they are relieved of the anxiety which comes from trying personally to decide thing. over which they have no personal control. For men can stand discomfort, sacrifice, pain, and danger far better than they can stand indecision. And so, given the conditions that exist in Europe today, the chances of riding out the storm by cool and calm statesmanship will be very much greater once the democracies have not only organized so that they are invincible, but once they feel themselves to be organized totally for their own security.

The Labor Board

AT A MOMENT when a Senate committee is holding hearings to determine whether the national labor relations act should be amended, President Roosevelt makes a slight concession to the critics of the act. One member of the three-man Labor Board set up under the act, came to the end of his term. Mr. Roosevelt desired to reappoint him. But there was opposition to reappointment by critics of the board and of the act. Mr. Roosevelt now defers to this criticism, drops the former board member and appoints a new man.

The new appointee has had experience in the past as a mediator. This fact, specifically, might disarm critics. It might suggest that the new appointee would or could turn the Labor Board into some kind of mediation board. This cannot possibly be. For a fundamental fact, always to be remembered about the Labor Board, is that it is not a mediation board and, as the law now stands, cannot be made a mediation board. The Labor Board is not a mediation board, and the Labor Act is not a mediation act.

The labor act, as now written, contemplates that there are two elements in industry—labor and ownership. And the labor act, as now written, contemplates that the Labor Board shall be exclusively the representative of labor. Ownership is not given access to the Labor Board. Owners, employers, are not permitted even to petition the board. The Labor Board, under the labor act as now written, looks upon ownership as something which the Labor Board must check, restrain, oppose; in many cases penalize.

Acts As Attorney For Labor Faction

IF WE WERE seking an analogy to suggest the function of the Labor Board, we might say it is the attorney for labor. It is an attorney acting as the spokesman for labor in complaints made by labor against employers. It is, so to speak, a prosecuting attorney, prosecuting on behalf of labor. The prosecution is directed against employers.

This might be all right if there were some neutral, judicial tribunal before which these disputes could be heard and adjudicated. That would be a mediation board. But no mediation board is provided for the disputes which the Labor Board conducts on behalf of labor. That the Labor Board should become in part a mediation board, rather than a mere attorney for labor, is one object of amendments to the labor act now proposed.

Worse than mere lack of a mediation board, before which complaints made through the Labor Board should be heard—much worse than that—the Labor Board has a right to be the judge in the disputes in which it is also the attorney for the complainants.

The mechanism of the Labor Board is that one employe of the board receives a complaint made by workers. Another employe of the Labor Board investigates the complaint. If he deems the complaint well founded, another employe of the Labor Board holds a hearing, in which the employer has a right to be heard. At the end of the hearing, the employe of the Labor Board makes a recommendation of decision.

A Classic Formula Of Unbearable Status

THIS RECOMMENDATION goes up to the Labor Board, and the Labor Board hands down final decision. In short, the Labor Board fulfills the classic formula of what has long been supposed to be an unbearable condition—that one man, or body, should be at once prosecutor and judge in the same case.

True, the final decision of the Labor Board can in many cases be appealed to a Federal court. But the Labor Board has good reason to hope that if it can avoid amendment of the act long enough, it will have courts which will uphold its most extreme positions.

The Labor Board claims the power, in its discetion, to support sit-down strikers. After workers have engaged in a sit-down, after they have practiced violence, after they have with violence resisted officers of the law; after they have been arrested, tried and convicted and served sentences for violation of State laws against violence and conspiracy—after all that, the Labor Board insists it has the power, under certain circumstances as determined by the board, to require that the employer reinstate the sit-downers in its employ.

New Deal Judges Uphold Labor Board

IN THE MOST conspicuous sit-down case appealed to the Federal courts, the courts, both circuit and Supreme, held invalid the action of the Labor Board in ordering the reinstatement of sit-downers.

But observe this: In both courts, every judge who had been on the court before th New Deal, held against the Labor Board. But every judge who had been appointed after the New Deal, that is, appointed by President Roosevelt, dissented. There was one New Deal appointee in the circuit court and (at that time) two in the Supreme Court. All three dissented.

It is inferable that the New Deal needs only to resist amendment of the labor act until it has had time to get a majority of the judges on the Federal courts. At present, it has four on the Supreme Court. One more justice, if another vacancy arises while the New Deal is in power, would make a majority.

State Of War

By Barnet Nover

The Realities Of Today

"FOR MORE than 40 years," says a character in one of Moliere's plays, "I've been speaking prose without knowing it." Similarly, people have been talking of war as an eventual possibility without realizing that it was, all the time, a contemporary fact.

Such obtuseness regarding the realities of the international situation has been productive of much evil. China was invaded. Ethiopia was conquered. Spain was made an international battlefield. The world deplored these aggressions but did little about them because they appeared in the eyes of Frenchmen and Englishmen and Americans and others as isolated developments rather than as battles in a world-wide conflict. Nor did the democratic powers perceive, until rather late in the day, that this war was being waged against them as well as against the immediate victims of attack. It was again a case of not being able to see the forest for the trees.

WHAT, in particular, the peaceful nations failed for years to take into account was that the nations responsible for these acts of aggression are nations which live and act on the assumption that they are at war. To them war is not an abnormal but the normal state of society. That is true of Japan. That is true of Italy. And it is notably true of present-day Germany.

The world knows what it means for a nation to be at war. It means the mobilization of man power far beyond anything required in peacetime. It means the regimentation of labor, industry, agriculture. It means an enoromously increased emphasis on production of instruments of destruction as against the satisfaction of ordinary human needs. It means large-scale propaganda to keep up the nation's morale and, concurrently, to undermine the morale of the enemy. It means restriction or suppression of freedom of thought and expression, the elimination of opposition.

THIS, to a greater or lesser degree, is what happened in all countries, democratic and autocratic alike, that participated in the conflict of 1914-1918. But precisely the same trend has been visible in even more pronounced fashion in the totalitarian states. But while the world has recognized the governments of those nations as dictatorships (they could hardly help doing so), there has been a failure to recognize them as nations at war.

That explains the naive assumption that democratic nations have no quarrel with the totalitarian dictatorships as such but only with their aggressive actions, past and contemplated. The assumption rests on the belief that a totalitarian dictatorship and an aggressive, warlike foreign policy are not necessarily related. Democratic statesmen, being democratic, have repeatedly said that they have no objection to the Third Reich being Nazi or Italy remaining Fascist. What they have objected to has been the effort of those nations to expand their frontiers at the expense of other lands.

Of late, however, the disturbing fact has come to be realized that a totalitarian philosophy and an aggressive policy are indissolubly linked. Being nations at war, the axis powers and Japan feel themselves compelled to fight on, by other than military means if possible, by military means if necessary, until victorious or defeated. And if defeated, whether by military means or other means, the result would mean the doom not only of the aggressive policy pursued by the totalitarian governments but of those governments as well.

Having come to a realization of this fact, the governments of Great Britain and France have begun to act accordingly. And they are acting not only like nations anticipating war some time in the future, but as nations which deem themselves already to be, to all intents and purposes, in a state of war.

Some while ago, for instance, the French Parliament abdicated its constitutional responsibilities and voted complete powers to the Daladier regime. This week the French government issued a decree regulating the press, in which, among other things, the publication of defamation or slander "tending to incite hatred between citizens" was prohibited. There is probably a good deal to be said for this action. But it is also the thin end of a wedge which may lead to such total suppression of freedom of the press in the French republic as obtained in the days of Georges Clemanceau.

IN GREAT BRITAIN evidence of the fact that a state of war is recognized as existing in all but bloodletting is not wanting. In time of peace Great Britain has always hesitated about making alliances, resorting to conscription or unbalancing her budget. She is doing all these now. She has made alliances wih Poland and extended pledges of aid to Rumania and Greece. The government has just ordered the conscription of 310,000 youths. And the budget of over $6,000,000,000, which the chancellor of the exechequer has just announced, can by no stretch of the imagination be called a peacetime budget. It is in every sense of the word a war budget and is so regarded by the government itself. Premier Chamberlain put the situation in a nutshell when, in justifying his about-face on conscription, he said: "We are not now at war . . . but no one can pretend that this is peacetime in any sense in which the word can be fairly used."

Now there can be only one of three outcomes in war—a victory by one side or the other or a negotiated peace in which there are neither victors or vanquished. At Munich, Mr. Chamberlain sought to achieve the latter. He failed. He has not yet given up the attempt. At least he hopes through a show of preponderant force, coupled with an offer of negotiation to prolong the present state of affairs which differs from war in the conventional sense only because it largely is waged by other than military means. But he no longer harbors the illusion that what we have today is peace.

New Dictatorship, Bolivia, Controls Big Supply of Tin

Bolivia's newly formed dictatorship now controls the Western Hemisphere's main supply of tin, and large quantities of other important minerals, a National Geographic Society bulletin said yesterday.

The Bolivian government is financed mainly by its exports, the article said, adding, "As the third greatest tin-producing country of the world, Bolivia's chief competitors are the Federated Malay States and the Netherlands Indies in Asia."

Tin is one of the metals highest on the United States' want list. Along with producing 12 per cent of the world's tin in 1937, Bolivia also placed third in exports of antimony, and shipped out large quantities of silver, lead, zinc, tungsten, copper and bismuth.

A Woman's New York

Babs Hutton And Doris Duke Visit Night Clubs

New York, April 26.

BARBARA HUTTON, the Countess This and That of Denmark, lost no time in flinging herself into the life of Manhattan Island—from which she once flung herself with equal zest. No sooner had Babs gotten her landlegs under her than she was off to the races. Her first public appearance was at luncheon at the Ritz-Carlton, where she put the ladies' eyes a-bulge with her sartorial chic and ha-cha. She wore a simple black crepe dress, topped by a bit of black straw hat blooming with lilacs and daisies. She wore a veil, of course. Who doesn't.

The same night she turned up at the new night club wow-wow, Fefe's Monte Carlo—again in black—and a few tables away was that million-dollar baby, Doris Duke Cromwell, who spends most of her time 'neath that old Hawaiian moon these days. Doris is nervous and inclined to the fidget side—while the Babs has poise, or maybe it's just indifference. The gals pressed fins on leaving the dance floor, and thereafter paid no attention to each other, as far as I could see. Neither of these hot-house darlings wore much jewelry. Lance was sleeping sweetly at home, and his mamma left the gilded joint early.

Both young ladies looked blonde and nice. They threw no rolls, broke no china and sang no "Sweet Adeline." They behaved like a couple of self-assured American heiresses of the old noblesse—one tobacco, one dime-store.

Doris' escort was the Duke of Sutherland, while the Countess was escorted by a Mr. Dan Silverberg. That young Frazier girl was not present. And so passed another quiet night in the life of New York. No runs, no hits, no errors. Ho hum!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Well, we're game to the core. If we can't get 100 ships of the U. S. Fleet, we settle for 35. About that many junior war-dogs as well as a couple of aged battleships are anchored in the Hudson, and the city is entertaining their officers and men with just as much warmth. So the girls and gobs will be seen on shadowy Riverside Drive just the same—only not so many.

I HEAR a new job beckons that bridegroom, Ralph Holmes, the youngster who recently married Libby "Moanin' Low" Holman. He's said to be wanted for a leading role in "Day in the Sun," a forthcoming show. The boy's pappy, Taylor Holmes, a star for many years, is as pert and spry as ever, as those who saw "I'd Rather Be Right" can testify.

The Silver Fox Set

"What did Grace Chubb have on?"

"Her silver fox bolero."

"You don't call THAT 'silver fox,' do you? It's just made of tails."

"It is terribly fuzzy. You know I really felt sorry for Grace when she stood up alongside Marie Tinsel and Edna Chitt. Any minute I expected their foxes to begin yapping at hers."

"Oh well, Marie Tinsel needn't be so high and mighty. She's only got an old pointed fox."

"Edna Chitt's isn't so much either. Of course though, she's got double skins."

"Yes, still—they're blended. I can always tell a blended fox a mile away. Now I admit my own fox is blended, but then it's expensive looking. I don't think many people would know the difference."

"Well, Edna wears hers as if she were the Duchess of Windsor in her albino."

"Wouldn't you simply LOVE to have an albino fox "

"Would I? But then of course there are only five in the world. You know I'd really be fairly well satisfied if I could have a good genuine unblended double skin scarf."

"So would I. Say, you know who I think has some good looking foxes? Mrs. Duffer."

"Yes, and another one's Mrs. Chitt Sailem."

"Now Mrs. Duffer has these two simply stunning unblended skins—"

"Mrs. Sailem has three skins."

"Yes, but I don't like that three-skin hunch system—you know, with the shrugged shoulders. I think it's saudy. Anyway, I bet Mrs. Sailem's foxes ARE blended."

"She says not. She says they are genuine thirty-first-generation pedigreed Frome foxes and that she has all the genealogical papers to prove it."

"Well, they don't look it. Anyway, were her foxes fed on horse meat? Of course, you know the genuine pedigreed foxes are fed only on horse meat."

"Yes, she says her's were fed on horse meat and, what is more, they were fed on pedigreed horses."

"Huh! From the way they bristle up, they look to me as if they were fed on some old fire horses."

"Oh, say; that new Mrs. Crash was there simply dripping in foxes!"

"Oh, the one we met at Marjorie's tea. Who is she, anyway?"

"I don't know, but she's simply got some magnificent skins. I never saw so much silver in anything in my life."

"Yes, I remember. I could tell they weren't ordinary foxes. She's nice, isn't she?"

"Yes, and you know Marjorie says she has a pillow muff, too."

"Not a pillow muff!"

"Yes, a genuine, unblended, silver fox pillow muff!"

"Of all things! She seems awfully sweet."

"Yes, she's really a person I'd like to know better."

"So would I. Say, let's call on her some day."

"All right. Let's do."

Home Nursing Routine Told

"I DON'T feel very well, mother." How often those words warn of the first symptoms of a contagious illness, such as measles, chicken pox or scarlet fever.

Will your other youngsters catch it, too? Not if you can recognize symptoms, know what precautions to take.

When you learn that your child has been exposed to a contagious disease, keep her away from other children during the incubation period, watch for symptoms. In measles, for instance, 10 days after exposure there will be sneezing, a head cold and cough, a temperature of 101 to 103 degrees. If these symptoms appear, call the doctor and isolate the little patient.

To protect others from contagion follow simple nursing technique such as this.

Keep a long loose-sleeved smock just inside the sickroom, put it on the second you enter. Then before leaving the room, unbutton the smock and wash your hands in a weak lysol solution.

Wash your hands again before touching the doorknob—and you may safely join your family.

Routine health care of your family is much easier and more successful, too, if you know simple nursing technique.

CORN MUFFINS!

New, easy way to make them and make them perfect

Your Figure, Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

State of Your Figure Governs Whether You Should Wear Shorts

SINCE WOMEN have taken to shorts for sports there has been an annual hullsballo as to who can wear them. In some States, they're against the law. In others, it's left to the local authorities, and one magistrate will probably down in history for the clever ruling that shorts cannot be worn by any woman under 14 or over 40. No woman is going to risk an argument with the law about her age!

IDA JEAN KAIN

But it isn't your age or the State you live in that would count in a beauty contest—it's the state of your figure. The thing about shorts is, they're shorts! They expose the thighs and with the exception of the girls in the chorus few women get enough side-to-side leg swinging for shapely thighs.

Your thighs may be too thin, with hollows on the inside that make you appear almost bow-legged. Or, there may be humps of fat on the outside of the thighs that look like an extension of the hipline. Special exercise will wear down these fatty accumulations and build firm muscle tissue where it is needed.

Slapping Fills Hollows

If you have been longing to get rid of those unsightly hollows along the inner thigh-line, here is a fast working exercise that will enable you to do it: Lie on the floor on the back with the arms straight out from the shoulders on the floor, knees flexed and feet on the floor up near the buttocks. Have the feet together.

Separate the knees four or five inches, and bring the legs together with a smart slap. If your legs are too thin and your knees bump, move one foot slightly ahead of the other on the floor. Begin slowly and gradually increase the speed of your slapping. You can repeat the exercise 100 counts.

Now for a real workout. This time on your back, arms stretched out at the sides on the floor, legs up in the air with knees perfectly straight. Swing the legs from the hips as far out to each side as possible, then bring the legs together again and cross them over the trunk. Have first one leg on top, then the other, as they are crossed.

Circulation Stimulated

In both exercises, the aim is to stimulate the circulation in the thighs and to strengthen the seldom used muscles. The second exercise is a variation of the side-to-side kicking, which is unexcelled for beautifying the thighs, and it also strengthens the muscles of the lower abdominal wall. You couldn't ask more of a specific exercise than that!

As with all other exercises, however, the results you get will depend on how faithfully and accurately you exercise.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl of 24 Is Trying to Marry Wealthy, Fiftyish Widower; He Is Elusive; How to Bag Him?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am in need of advice regarding circumstances that have developed in my life, and I have no one to turn to, as my people are in a faraway country. I am an American, 24 years old, and have been in this country about 10 months. It's all very new to me, as I was born and brought up in this foreign country.

About six months ago I met a man (a widower for nearly three years) who is 30-odd years older than myself. He is very well-to-do, attractive and respected by many influential friends. Marriage with him would be very secure and profitable. From the first he has been most attentive to me, although in the beginning, I must say, I more or less took the initiative myself.

Perhaps I had better say here that I have never been especially attractive to the opposite sex; not because of my looks (which would be called moderately good) but likely from my rather aloof air when with men. In the case of younger men I have never been able to hold their interest. Perhaps it has been my fault alone, but they have so little to offer; at least the ones I have previously met. But this man has, besides his prosperity, a far-reaching intelligence that seems to make us close in companionship.

After four months, this companionship is becoming more necessary to him, I believe, for hardly an evening passes that we are not together. Of course, this companionship has drifted into ardent lovemaking. He is, apparently, terribly attracted, and I have responded somewhat, hoping he would finally want marriage. But from the first he was given me to understand that he could not or would not marry anyone. After all this, too, he is quite frank in saying that he is fond of me, but not in love.

His objections to marriage would be, of course, the difference in ages; also, not wanting the responsibility of another marriage. I have more or less agreed with him on the subject, and on almost anything he says or suggests, hoping to gain thereby. But it all seems rather useless, up to this point. We are nearly always by ourselves, for the few friends he has introduced me to have been far from cordial, it being quite evident that they have not liked me. This distresses me, in a way, only from the point of view that it may influence him.

Then I try to think this very isolation from his friends may bring things to pass more quickly. I am really of a rather determined character, but have made myself appear otherwise in order to influence him, if possible. Do you think, from what I have told you, that I am very foolish to go on, hoping against hope that he may change? I really cannot figure out his real intentions, although I should, I guess. Because, as I told you at first, he made his attitude very clear and seems to cling to it. But it does seem from his ardent lovemaking that he must care for me somewhat.

BEWILDERED.

Greek Meets Greek

DEAR BEWILDERED: This appears to be a case of Greek meeting Greek. It seems that the man is out to make a conquest, while you are out to feather your nest via the matrimonial route. One could feel more sympathy with your impasse if one understood that your heart was being broken by a wary sophisticate. As things stand, however, it appears that your designs upon the man are virtualy as calculating as his designs upon you. While one senses that a curious bond of interdependent companionship has developed out of this mutually recognized battle of wits, one isn't convinced that anything very fine is at stake, either way.

Throughout your petition, love is not mentioned, nor even implied. The whole situation seems to turn on the proposition of who is to get the best of whom—and how? Frankly, I think you have been playing into the man's hands, thus far. I think your calculated quasi-surrender represents more loss than gain. It may encourage the man's desire to possess you physically, but it certainly isn't paving the way to matrimony. You are giving him more reason to despise than to revere you. You are selling yourself very cheaply, if not, indeed, giving yourself away piece-meal; instead of placing an impressive and unalterable evaluation upon your person and your society.

When you are somewhat older and perhaps better informed (through experience and observation) in the ways of moneyed men of the world, you will know that such men are quick to discern, and ruthless in seizing upon, that which is available for exploitation. Nine out of 10 such men—being of a shrewd, selfish, cautious and tight-fisted nature, rather than ardent, generous, open and gentle—will take what they want (that they can get) on terms supposedly most advantageous to themselves. Their greatest respect is reserved for, and reluctantly conceded to, those who stand firm for a fair exchange.

As a would-be lady Machiavelli, you are no match for this man. I daresay he has understood your motives quite clearly almost from the first, and has been smiling up his sleeve all the while at the clumsy, transparent maneuverings with which you have sought to corral him as husband. What you should have done, I think—if he appealed to you as a potential husband of the most desirable, dependable sort—was to have played a straight role of serious minded, unworldly, rather defenseless and emotionally vulnerable young woman; erstwhile untouched by love; unschooled in the ways of love; and, as would logically follow, unwilling to yield to love save under the enduring protectorate of marriage.

I believe, indeed, that you would have behaved in the very manner outlined above if it had been your heart, rather than your head, which in the beginning made answer to the man's matrimonial eligibility. Attracted by false goals, you have lent yourself to a false role—one that does not do justice, I am sure, to your essential nature; one that has given the man a false estimate of your real human and social value; and one that may not, in the final analysis, express your eventual, fundamental reactions to him as admirer and lover.

In other words, there is a possibility that you might end by falling in love with him, in which case your preliminary efforts to entice him with calculated complaisance would constitute double reason for regret. The average woman, sincerely in love, is constrained to keep her secret until guaranteed full measure of protective reciprocity, and shrinks involuntarily from unpredicated so-called lovemaking. No doubt the man (as a person of experience) understands as much, consciously or subconsciously, and therein finds warrant, intuitively, for withholding his deepest loyalties from you.

I think this is truly a case of a person's being "hoist with his own petard." Instead of behaving in an amiable, honorable, open-handed, yet proudly self-respecting way, you have stooped to a level of sly, trap-setting intrigue, and are being tripped up in those very nets you had spread for your opponent. Whatever chances you had for teaching this man to love you would have been best promoted by bringing character, rather than strategy, into play; by declaring your own position, point by point, at the outset, as candidly as he stated his; and by maintaining the relationship on a basis of affectionate friendship, at most, until he obliged you with a proposal of marriage.

Incidentally, if the man's friends disdain you, it is probably because they regard you either as the man's mistress already (and a social nobody into the bargain, from their snobbish point of view), or an out-and-out fortune hunter, whom none would care to know. As a matter of fact, considering your performance, there may be some justification for their attitude. When your performance is all it should be, their reactions can be ignored. This type of man will marry to suit himself, and not to please his friends.

Today's Health Talk

Science, Medicine, Real Detectors In Today's Murders

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Dr. Harrison S. Martland, professor of forensic medicine at New York University's College of Medicine, calls our attention to the realities of the methods of detection of murder in our large cities, in contrast to the inspired methods of the detectives of fiction, such as Nero Wolfe, Philo Vance and Perry Mason.

Most murders are impetuous, the result of jealousy, revenge or during fights or brawls. In New York 393 of the 426 murders in 1935 were either by shooting, or assaults with the famous "blunt instrument."

From the standpoint of concealment to avoid detection of the crime, these are stupid methods. If violence is evident, as it must be in a shooting, the greatest primary doubt is laid; the doubt, of course, is whether death came about by natural causes. In poison, a subtler method, there is always a question. Even expert testimony by chemists may leave a jury in doubt.

Guns Easy to Buy

The frequency of shooting deaths brings up the question of the ease with which it is possible in America to obtain firearms.

"Detective magazines carry a string of advertisements of cheap revolvers guaranteed to kill," says Dr. Martland. "Mail order houses furnish weapons to anyone, old and young, sane or insane, good or bad, without the least difficulty."

In regard to self-defense against this battalion of artillery in the hands of irresponsibles, he says, "Anyone familiar with the present day dangers to innocent persons knows full well that unless a person is trained to shoot and kill on sight, possession of firearms only increases the danger. The average unarmed person is much safer in the presence of a criminal than the armed person untrained to shoot to kill."

Medical Man Needed

Dr. Martland makes a very strong plea for the abolition of the system of the coroner. "A dispassionate study of the office leads one to the inevitable conclusion that it is an institution of government wholly unsuited to the needs of the present day. The coroner does nothing that must not be done over again."

The system of the medical examiner should be substituted for that of coroner. There is no such office as coroner in Germany, France, Italy, Russia or the Scandinavian countries.

Dressy Culottes Now Popular

Hollywood, Calif.—Although the vogue for culottes took three years to develop, Milo Anderson of Warner Brothers predicts they will be as popular as skirts this summer for every hour of the day.

Culottes are already common in the sports and formal scenes in Hollywood, but Milo is the first to put them in the dressy daytime division. A very full pair he designed for Gloria Holden are the new 16-inch skirt length, are made of gaily printed floral crepe and are teamed with a shirred white voile baby blouse buttoning in back and a divided petticoat of white handkerchief linen edged with three rows of narrow ruffles.

Debutantes to Share Spotlight With Royalty Here in June

Unprecedented Number to Make Bows to Capital Society This Summer; Miss Glover, Miss Chatfield Taylor, Miss Wilkinson on List

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

WHILE PRINCES AND POTENTATES will hold the center of the Capital stage through the spring season, the spotlight won't be theirs entirely. Even the visit of Their Majesties, King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, will not overshadow the partying round that will initiate the 1939-40 debutante whirl.

Capital society heretofore has grown accustomed to buds bowing in the winter, but this year some of the most important young ladies on the forthcoming list will be presented early in June, about the time the King and Queen come to town. Three of the lot will make their curtsies on the same date, June 10, and each will be on hand when her sister debs are presented.

Miss Nancy Glover, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Carroll Glover, will blossom first at a garden party given by her parents at their home in Massachusetts avenue. Miss Rose Chatfied-Taylor, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Chatfield Taylor, will make her bow at a dinner at the 1925 F Street Club; and later that same evening, Miss Joan Wilkinson, daughter of Capt. and Mrs. Theodore S. Wilkinson, will be presented at a dance at Hockley, her parents' home across the Potomac.

Two days before she becomes a full-fledged debutante, Miss Glover will receive her diploma from St. Timothy's School at Catonsville, Md. She attended Cathedral School here before entering St. Timothy's; is interested in music, and plays the piano with unusual skill; is fond of outdoor sports in general, and swimming and horseback rading in particular.

After her June whirl here, she will be off for a bit of serious work at Children's Island, near Marblehead, Mass., where she and some of her St. Timothy's classmates will spend a month helping to care for the colony of crippled youngsters there. Incidentally, Mrs. Glover, her mother, will leave tonight for New York, where she will attned the opening of the fair and the tea to be given this week-end in honor of Mrs. Vincent Astor, chairman of the committee for women's participation in the Grover Whalen's wonder exhibition. Mrs. Glover heads the District of Columbia committee.

Spring-Debut Vogue Started Last Year

But back to buds—Rose Chatfield-Taylor's sister, Adelaide, probably started this vogue for spring debuts in Washington when she came out at a garden party given by her parents last year. Oh, there had been spring coming-out fetes before. Countess Baillet-Latour, the former Marianna Dunn, made her bow at such an event several years ago, but the vogue didn't begin to catch on around these parts until last year, when two buds bowed into Washington society in May and June. Because she lives here, I mentioned Miss Chatfield-Taylor first, but her debut came several weeks after that of Miss Fontaine Fahnestock. The latter, who had been making her home with her mother in Brussels, was presented here at a ball in May given for her father and step-mother, Mr. and Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock.

Miss Rose Chatfield-Taylor is attending school in Westover, Conn., and she will conclude her year's study there only a few days before she makes her Capital bow.

"Hockley," the Virginia home of Capt. and Mrs. Wilkinson, was the scene of two important parties given last year in connection with the launching of their first debutante daughter, Miss Ann Wilkinson. The dance on June 10 will be strictly a younger-set party, but it will be both big and brilliant, and in every way a fitting climax for the trio of deb fetes on that date.

Leaves Today for Visit in New York

Harris & Ewing.

Miss Betty Byrne, who made her debut here several years ago and who has been visiting Mrs. Eldridge Jordan in the latter's Georgetown home, is pictured here with "Jimmie Gibson Jordan," who belongs to Mrs. Jordan. Miss Byrne will leave Washington today for New York, where she will be a guest of Mrs. Albert Dewey, and will visit the World's Fair. From there she will go on to Canada for some early June fishing and will meet her mother, Mrs. Stanton J. Peellee, late in the summer at their ranch, Four Winds, in Chardon, Ohio. This fall Miss Byrne expects to return to London, where she makes her home, and Mrs. Peellee will return to the Byrne Ranch in Santa Clara Valley, Calif.

Regime Bleeds Wisconsin Cheese Makers, Says Wiley

The people of Wisconsin, "the greatest cheese producing State in the country," feel the need of a change in the Government, Senator Alexander Wiley (Republican), of Wisconsin, told the Advertising Club of Washington yesterday at a luncheon in the Raleigh Hotel.

"They recognize the humanitarian appeal of this Administration," the Senator said, "but it doesn't produce the goods. About 90 per cent of the Wisconsin dairy farmers are bleeding to death because they are only being paid half what it costs them to make their cheese."

The luncheon was in commemoration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the beginning of the cheese industry in Wisconsin.

Bedtime Story

Old Mr. Toad Explains

By Thornton W. Burgess

'Tis true, e'en though it may sound queer,
A blessing may be found in fear.
—Old Mother Nature.

"Are you afraid?" asked the little Rabbit of Old Mr. Toad.

"Of coiurse I'm afraid," replied Old Mr. Toad.

"Who of?" asked the little Rabbit.

"Buffer the Adder," replied Old Mr. Toad in a whisper, as if afraid of being overheard. He meant the Hog-nosed Snake. "And his cousin, Mr. Blacksnake," he added. Then he rolled his eyes around and looked behind him and all about.

"Are you looking for some one?" asked the young Rabbit.

"You haven't seen them around anywhere, have you?" whispered Old Mr. Toad.

"Buffer the Adder and Mrs. Blacksnake," replied Old Mr. Toad.

"Who are they?" the little Rabbit wanted to know.

Old Mr. Toad looked relieved. "That's a great relief," said he. "Yes, sir, that's a great relief. If you had seen them you wouldn't ask who they are. So I know they haven't been around. I think I better get to the Smiling Pool before they do appear. Perhaps they are not awake yet, though I think they must be. Of course they must be, for they awake about the same time that I do."

"Have you been asleep?" asked the little Rabbit innocently.

Old Mr. Toad looked very hard at the young Rabbit to see if he was joking. "I slept all winter," said Old Mr. Toad.

But this didn't mean anything to the little Rabbit, for or course he never had seen a winter and so he didn't know what it was. "What is winter?" he asked.

Old Mr. Toad blinked his golden eyes and gulped once or twice. How could he explain winter? "There is a time of year when there is nothing for some of us to eat and so we sleep," said he.

"Where do you sleep?" the little Rabbit was growing curious.

"In the ground," replied Old Mr. Toad.

"Does some one dig a hole for you?" asked the little Rabbit.

"No," replied Old Mr. Toad. "I do my own digging."

The little Rabbit looked Old Mr. Toad over. His hands didn't look as if they would be good for much in digging. The little Rabbit said so.

"Oh," explained Old Mr. Toad, "I don't use my hands for digging. Of course not. I fear that if I depended on them I never would get buried."

"Buried!" exclaimed the little Rabbit, and he looked puzzled. "Who said anything about being buried? You don't call going down in a hole in the ground being buried, do you?"

"Who said anything about going down in a hole in the ground?" asked Old Mr. Toad. Without waiting for a reply he continued. "I don't use a hole. If I did that some one might follow me in. I just dig in and bury myself, and here is what I dig with." He held up a hind foot.

"With just that?" asked the little Rabbit.

"No. With this, too, stupid," replied Old Mr. Toad disgustedly as he held out the other hind foot.

The little Rabbit looked as perplexed as ever. "How can you dig with your hind feet? How can you see where you are going? And what do you mean by burying yourself?" he asked.

"I don't have to see where I'm going. I don't want to see where I'm going. I know where I'm going without seeing. As for digging with my hind feet, why I just dig; that's all. And when I get through I'm out of sight and there isn't any hole. Now do you understand?" said Old Mr. Toad.

"No," replied the little Rabbit. "Of course it is just as you say but it doesn't make sense to me."

"Come with me," said Old Mr. Toad, and hopped toward a small bare sandy place.

Red Cross Must Bolster Peace, Fieser Says

Has Role to Play In Preserving Values Of Civilization, He Says

The Red Cross has a role to play in preserving the values of a civilization now threatened by war, James L. Fieser, Red Cross vice chairman in charge of domestic operations, said yesterday at the organization's annual convention.

"Most of the world is on the march again," Fieser said. "Little profited, nothing learned, it is eager to do it all over again. A chip on the shoulder has many knockers-off. People are ready at a command to goosestep again into the dance with death and destruction. So it is in Europe. So it is in Asia.

"There has been much progress in destructive forces in these 25 years. The old crates used by aviators then haven been superseded by air fortresses which can strike at the rate of 300 or 400 miles an hour.

City Streets Dug Up

"In many countries not yet involved, city streets are dug up to provide holes into which people may dive for protection. Are our cities of the future to be like prairie dog villages. New industries turn out bombproof shelters for one's family—a sort of cyclone cellar to negate a bit of the danger.

"The healthy baby in many places in shown in the latest muzzle protector from poison fumes. Gas mask instruction and drills have become a part of normal Red Cross technique for old and young . . .

"Certainly few things were settled by what we call the World War. The question at issue in the clash of opinion is between the inhumanities on the one hand and the humanities on the other. Perhaps the civilization which we have known is at the cross-roads. We have a role to play in preserving its values."

More Members Needed

Vice Chairman Fieser said that the United States could not call itself prepared for the emergencies of peace and the hazards of war until the Red Cross had a larger enrollment. The 5,700,000 members today, he said, represent only 4.5 per cent of the American population.

James B. Forgan, chairman of the Chicago chapter, urged the delegates to make known the work of the Red Cross in their communities.

"The newspapers and radio stations are the best friends of any Red Cross chapter," he said. "The editors of every newspaper in your community should be kept thoroughly informed of important work the chapter undertakes, and where possible should have a voice in the policies and programs of the organization."

Edward J. Demson, roll call chairman for Cleveland, had this to say on the annual Red Cross roll call:

"The Red Cross is supreme in the confidence of the people. It will remain free of prejudice of race, creed, and color, and ready to serve in disaster, in war, and in any upheaval which may leave human misery. The Red Cross is the one distilled product of thousands of years of civilization, challenged by none, acceptable by all, with the basic creed that it is more blessed to give than to receive."

The 1939 Florence Nightingale Medal, highest international nursing award, has been given to Miss Stella Mathews, of Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, by the International Red Cross Committee in Geneva, it was announced yesterday by Miss Mary Beard, Red Cross nursing service director.

She is a native of Albion, Ill., and a graduate of the Knowlton Training School for Nurses in Milwaukee. She is now on leave in Milwaukee, and will return to Honolulu soon to resume her duties as director of the nursing bureau there.

A play, "Called to Service," which emphasizes the need for outstanding leadership in Red Cross chapters, was presented twice at the Belasco Theater last night. Forty members of the Washington Civic Theater took part and music was furnished by a 15-piece National Broadcasting Co. orchestra. Charles Dillon, of the Red Cross public relations staff, directed the play.

WPA Graft Charged by Sen. Bridges

'Excessive' Cost Cited At Virginia G. O. P. District Parley

By the Associated Press.

Culpeper, Va., April 26.—Asserting the average cost to the Nation of supporting a WPA worker was $694 a year, and in New Hampshire was $894 a year, United States Senator Henry Styles Bridges (Republican), New Hampshire, charged here today that "the difference goes to grease New Deal politicians."

Bridges told the Republicans of the Eighth Virginia District that the Roosevelt Administration had made 21 trade agreements with foreign countries, had lowered the tariff on 31 commodities and "hasn't raised it on a single one yet. A direct result has cost us the American market for our commodities."

The Senator reiterated Republican demands that the Federal Government return the relief problem to the States, and said it was his firm conviction that there would be a change of administration in 1940.

The meeting, attended by some 300 delegates, named Ryland Heflin, of Stafford County, chairman, and John T. Strauss, of Alexandria, secretary.

Maj. Henry A. Wise, national committeeman from Virginia, told the delegates that "Franklin D. Roosevelt wants to be President again, and the people of this country are not going to let him drive us into another war to gain the Presidency."

W. P. Ames, of the Arlington County board of supervisors, scored the New Deal and asserted there should be a tariff on the import of agricultural commodities to protect American farmers, instead of having them plow crops under.

The Young Republicans of the district adopted a resolution indorsing "the efforts and policies of Kenneth F. Simpson," who managed Thomas E. Dewey's recent gubernatorial campaign in New York, and extending to him "our best wishes in his continued effort to lead the Republican Party away from reactionary control."

2 Judges Censor Police Court News In Baltimore

Baltimore, Md., April 26 (U.P.).—Two city criminal court judges Tuesday imposed strict censorship on police court news and threatened to issue contempt citations for newspapers which violate their edict.

The order, one of the most restrictinve imposed on news-gathering in recent history, prohibits police, prosecuting officials or any State official from furnishing any type of information relative to pending criminal cases.

The judges—Emory Niles and Eli Frank—did not explain reasons for their action, but it came immediately before arraignment of Aurelio Tarquinio, alleged torso murderer. Pictures taken by news photographers in connection with the slaying were reported to have irked the jurists.

Newspaper officials admitted privately that Maryland statutes apparently permit judges to make such rulings.

Senators Set Hearings on District Funds

Commissioners to Be First Witnesses, Overton Discloses

Senate hearings on the 1940 District supply bill will begin at 10:30 tomorrow morning, Chairman Overton, of the sub-committee on appropriations, announced yesterday.

The District Commissioners and Auditor Daniel J. Donovan will be the first witnesses, Senator Overton said, after which departmental heads will be heard.

Three supplemental estimates are expected to be considered by the Senate sub-committee and may be added to the $47,000,000 appropriated by the House. The largest of these, however, $105,000 for child welfare work, is still pending before the Budget Bureau.

Two Supplemental Estimates

Two minor supplemental estimates were submitted by the Budget Bureau for inclusion in the second deficiency bill but were deemed not urgent enough for inclusion by the Senate Appropriations Committee. One is $75,000 for a gymnasium at the Coolidge High School, and the other is $28,340 to buy modern filing equipment for the tax assessor's office.

The Commissioners, it is understood, also will ask that authorization for the proposed main public library be restored to the bill. The authorization was stricken out of the measure on the House floor upon a point of order, but the initial $350,000 appropriation was left intact. The library is to be erected in the southwest corner of the Municipal Center tract.

Little Change in View

On the whole, it was learned, the District heads will ask little change in the bill as it passed the House. In some instances they intend to ask that the appropriation be restored to the budget estimates, but the total increase will be small, it was said.

Public hearings on the fair trade practice bill and amendments to the District unemployment compensation act will be held this morning before a House sub-committee.

Tomorrow another House subcommittee will start hearings on the bill to revise the District small loan act.

Grocer Watches Store, Has Two Men Arrested

Because a grocer waited around in his store one night to solve the mystery of disappearing food, two 51-year-old men were being held in District Jail yesterday, charged with housebreaking.

The two men, charged Henry W. Wood, who runs the grocery at 633 E street northeast, hired the rear roof separated from the store by a padlocked door.

Wood asserted that Saturday night the padlocked door swung open from the hinged end, the hinge-pins having been removed, and that the two roomers ran away on seeing him. Detective Watson Salkeld arrested the two men from a description of them by Wood.

Meeting at the Playground department headquarters at 515 D street northwest, the council also elected to the committee Harry Wender, Martin Hider, R. Brown, E. S. Hoffman, W. L. Howenstein and Miss Edith Coulson, the latter recreational chairman of the Council of Social Agencies.

Washington camera clubs will hold a joint meeting under auspices of the Washington Camera Council at 8 p. m. today in the new Interior auditorium. H. R. Rockwell will give an illustrated lecture on exposure problems. Mary Eleanor Browning will preside.

40,000 to See Gov. Price Crown Va. Blossom Festival Queen Today

Winchester Jammed As Miss Garner Arrives

By Scott Hart,
A Staff Correspondent.

Winchester, Va., April 26.—The Vice President's dark eyed grandchild, Miss Genevieve Garner, of Texas, rushed into Mrs. R. E. Byrd's home, out of the rain today to say what 15 former queens of the apple realm have chanted: "I'm delighted."

Arriving here in an automobile behind two rainsoaked Virginia State highway policemen, Miss Garner planned a quiet evening in advance of tomorrow when she reigns over the fleeting kingdom of apple blossoms.

Meanwhile, sporadic showers fell on Winchester, wetting the apple blossoms tied to the lamp-poles and drenching the banners, apple-blossom colored, that hang across the streets. Early in the evening, the vanguard of the anticipated 40,000 visitors came in.

Gov. Price to Officiate ... ...

Gov. James H. Price will arrive tomorrow and crown Miss Garner at 3 p. m. in the Handley High School auditorium. The first presentation of the springtime pageant 'In Festival Time,' by a cast of 1,000 persons will follow the coronation.

Other notables expected tomorrow include the governor's aide, William Kemper, and Congressmen A. Willis Robertson, of Lexington, Colgate Darden, of Norfolk, and others. Mayor and Mrs. Charles R. Anderson are to be including Dr. J. Fulmer Bright, of Richmond, and Cornelius D. Scully, of Pittsburgh. Miss Garner's mother, Mrs. John Tulley Garner, of Texas, and her grandmother, Vice President Garner's wife, will arrive tomorrow as guests of U. S. Senator and Mrs. Harry F. Byrd.

No one here today was disheartened by those April showers that brin May flowers and the possibilities of a wet blanket on apple blossoms.

These Virginains of the upper valley are relying on weather luck that's been very consistent these 16 years since the first Queen Shenandoah sat on a gold-trimmed throne to bless, with her grandest smile, the finest apple country in America.

The Weather Bureau here late today predicted showers tonight, probably concluding by 7 a. m. tomorrow; fair and cooler Thursday and Friday with night temperatures between 45 and 50 degrees.

75,000 Awaited

Actually, this normally quiet city that dwells on apples, the by-products of apples and dreams of those lacier days when Stonewall Jackson whipped the devil out of Gen. Banks in these parts, is waiting now for an estimated 50,000 or 75,000 visitors.

In the morning and early afternoon, the showers came. An early arriving concessionaire of the impending carnival had just begun to hawk the world's greatest carburetor from his stand at a curb when his overture to all the carnival bedlam that will be unloosed tomorrow was drenched.

Out at Handley High School, it was feared for a while that the pageant's dress rehearsal would have to be abandoned. While the soft rain pelted, the younger children cried from the covered porches:

"April showers, April showers;" and the vast landscape that is flung off for 20 miles from the school showed only a dim, graying mist of mountains that in the sunshine turn blue. But the cry of "April showers" was the prophecy: for the sun soon came, fighting from the clouds. People gathered to see the dress rehearsal.

Mother Goose Pageant

The pageant is not a halleujah to the sun returning on the apple lands this year. The theme is changed to a vast mother goose portrayal that sends hundreds of children into wild songs about humpty-dumpty and Jack and Jill, who climbed a hill, possibly as high as those blue mountains seem now.

All's ready but the shouting. Down town, the hotels are filling and restaurants are stocking up on eggs and ham. The rains may come but no one will admit thinking of it. Ben Bernie, the orchestra leader, will come and that's got the town excited.

One civic dignitary lamented today that more attention is being paid to the name "orchestra" than to Frederick County, which gives Virginia its greatest number of apples. Each tree gives 7.21 bushels in average, and there are 559,920 trees. And along comes an orchestra to set the town talking when all the world, from any hill, is streaming away in the pastel of bloom.

There's a story in this: It was the contract for this name orchestra fixed the date for the festival. The blossoms coincided with the date. They're at their full right now. And last year when the festival date was made to suit the probable appearance of the blossoms, there was not a blossom in sight. They had gone.

A farmer leaned against a lamppole, spitting Virginia tobacco juice in the street, talking. The blossoms are right a this minute, he said, authoritatively. It's the first time in six years a festival has had them this beautiful. They'll be beautiful for a while yet, because the York apples haven't appeared. No bother there. And, after all, that't the main thing, isn't it, he asked.

It's part of it. Traditionally, the festivals have revolved about three distinct attitudes. Those visitors who seize the occasion to carouse and see nothing here, except from hotel windows. Those who delight in the great parade that sends firemen units, dozens of bands and handsome uniforms down the streets. The children who delight in their pageant roles, and being quite young, really want to raise their voices to the sun that brings so many blossoms on the trees.

The queen, a slight, dark-haired Texas girl who comes here today, will glimpse only the beauty of it. The public won't see her until tomorrow. Tomorrow morning she will take an airplane flight over the orchards. In the afternoon, she will walk the way of apple blossom queens, down the high steps of Handley School to a gold-trimmed throne.

Virginia Lifer Seeks to Clear Son and Woman

Richmond, Va., April 26 (AP).—Maj. Rice M. Youell, superintendent of the State Penitentiary, made public today a statement by Laban Blunt Howard, who is serving a life term for murder, in which the convict said he "alone should be held responsible" for the killing of Edward N. Hawkins, a former State motorcycle officer.

Howard said the statement was intended to clear the names of his son, Shelton, of Newport News, and Violet Merryman, through whose testimony he was convicted in Chesterfield Circuit Court in 1937.

Howard said he accused the woman at the trial because of her tetimony against him.

Hawkins' body was dug up from a potter's field grave in Prince George County after the Merryman woman tipped police she had witnessed the slaying in a cabin nearly three years ago.

Tobacco Strikers Return to Work

Richmond, Va., April 26 (AP).—Employes of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. at Richmond and Durham, N. C., plants returned to work today after ratifying an agreement described by union leaders as giving them "99.99 per cent closed shop."

Company representatives and spokesmen for striking members of the International Workers Union announced yesterday an agreement had been reached, ending the nine-day strike by some 900 union employes of the local plant.

The agreement also provided for an upward adjustment of wages for several classifications.

Methodist Unity Lauded By President

'May God Prosper the Work,' He Wires 960 At Joint Conference

By the Associated Press.

Kansas City, April 26.—Representatives of three branches of the Methodist Church, already working as one organization, were told in a letter from President Roosevelt tonight their unification program was "a harbinger of better things" to "a world distracted by malice, envy and ill will."

The 900 delegates and 60 bishops who acted in concord for the first time today to end century-old schisms in Methodism, heard also a message from a London pastor stressing the importance of "a revival of Christian religion" in bringing about world peace.

The uniting conference, which will bring 8,000,000 persons into one church, opened formally this morning.

To Minimize Differences

The President's letter praised the unity action because "the need for union is great, particularly so, since to the democracies of the world has fallen the task of defending and perpetuating freedom of conscience."

The conference, his letter added, will "be hailed with satisfaction by communions outside the Methodist fold as an indication that the spiritual forces of this Nation are determined to minimize differences which hitherto have tended to artificial and unnecessary divisions.

"This does not mean that honest differences in religious belief are not to be recognized. It must remain a part of our American heritage of complete freedom of conscience to respect those differences in the spirit of toleration which is of the very essence of our American tradition.

Freedom of Warship Upheld

"A solution of the problems that ever more darkly overshadow the world today is impossible without recourse to the forces of religion.

"The American conscience has been shocked in these anxious times to witness a trampling underfoot of the sacred right of freedom of conscience—the right of every man to worship God according to the dictates of his own heart . . . The American Nation will continue to sustain before all the world the torch of complete liberty of conscience . . . With us freedom and order are moral requisites. Without freedom all is chaos."

"The Methodists," he concluded, "have pointed the way to union. May God prosper the work and hasten the day when Christians of all confessions shall present a united front to combat the forces of strife that threaten our heritage of religion."

Living On a Slope

The Rev. Robert Bond of London, a fraternal delegate to the conference, in a speech prepared for the same audience which heard the President's message, said:

"We are living on a slope and are rapidly going down and the end must be universal disaster unless some change takes place. Nothing but a revival of Christian religion is capable of solving the right relationships between the various nationalities and social grades . . ."

From Atlanta, the Layman's Organiation for the Preservation of the Methodist Episcopal Church South wired a fresh protest asserting the "present attempt at union is invalid for legal reasons."

Conference leaders made no direct comment on the Telegram, but reiterated that unification of the Southern branch with the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Protestant Church already had been approved by large majorities of the conferences of all three bodies.

Other U. S. Bureaus Enter Girls to Rival Those of Interior in Beauty-Brains Contest

Not to be outdone by the lovely ladies of the Interior Department, girls of the other Government bureaus are starting to send in entries for The Washington Post-A. F. G. E. "Beauties With Brains" contest. Out of six girls who were among yesterday's entrants, only one . . . Miss Verna Phillips, 603 Concord Apartments . . . was from the Department of the Interior.

Besides Miss Phillips, the entries were Miss Marie J. Hynes, 3034 Porter street northwest of the General Accounting Office; Miss Gladys Alford, 1435 North Veitch street, Arlington, of the Department of Justice; Miss Beverly Belzer, 3166 Eighteenth street northwest, of the Bureau of Engraving; Miss Lena C. Nead, Room 234 Tower Building, of the Narcotic Division of the Treasury Department, and Miss Mabel A. Sugnet, 1616 Sixteenth street northwest, of the Finance Division of the WPA.

If the saying . . . "the camera doesn't lie," holds true, the judges are in for a real job when the time comes to select the semifinalists. Thus far, every entrant could easily qualify as the World's Fair's "Fairest."

If you have not entered the contest, send in your picture today. The first prize of a loving cup and an all-expense trip to the New York World's Fair is well worth shooting for. And men, don't forget that you can send in the pictures of your favorite Government girls.

The contest will close on May 3. All Government girls who live in Washington or vicinity are eligible. All you need do to enter the contest is (1) pick out the best photograph or snapshot of yourself, (2) write your name, address and Government bureau on the back, (3) fill out an entry blank, using the coupon in The Post, or one obtained at the counter in the lobby of The Post Building, 1337 E street northwest, (4) attach the entry blank to the picture, and (5) bring or mail it to the Contest Editor, The Washington Post.

3 More Held in Poison Ring; 'Kiss of Death' Woman Sought

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, April 26.—A middle-aged Italian immigrant, now a prisoner in a New York penitentiary, was pictured by Police Capt. James A. Kelly today as a "big shot" of a "corporation" that dealt in death by poison to collect insurance money.

Kelly's statement, recording of a widow's confession that she poisoned her husband, and three arrests on murder charges climaxed a sensation-packed day in the investigation of a poison ring which investigators have indicated may have taken 75 lives.

Detectives have said plotters operated in at least four Eastern seaboard States.

In tracing deaths back ten years, investigators exhumed five bodies, found traces of poison, and arrested three women and two men on charges of murdering relatives or acquaintances to profit from insurance. One man is facing the electric chair.

Then, on the basis of disclosures by a widow who admitted three slayings, they arrested today two more women and a man and rounded up at least a dozen persons for questioning.

The prisoner Kelly termed a ring leader is Caesar Valenti, 55, serving a sentence in Rikers Island Penitentiary, N. Y., for liquor law violation. Immigration officials there said he might be deported, when his term expires Sunday, because of 11 convictions in Italy prior to his arrival in the United States 30 years ago.

Kelly charged Valenti was "director" of the "corporation" which collected $300 from each $1,000 insurance policy and a percentage of higher amounts.

Investigators declared they had "only scratched the surface," and Kelly said "we strongly suspect" the plot "emanated from the Black Hand movement" in Italy.

Detectives named Valenti and two other men, Herman and Paul Petrillo, as key figures in the ring, but said some of the "real brains" were still at large. Herman has been convicted of first-degree murder. Paul is facing trial. Among the leaders, detectives are seeking a man known only as "The Rabbi" and an alluring brunette woman "with a kiss of death."

"The Rabbi" was a "witch doctor" and the woman accomplice a widow who married or became intimate with men only to poison them, officers disclosed.

The new arrests, made suddenly after long questioning of a confessed poisoner, were of Mrs. Josephine Romaldo, 41, who Assistant District Attorney Vincent P. McDevitt said admitted poisoning her husband; Mrs. Agnes Mandiuk, 36, whose husband, a baker, died four years ago of what was then certified as "heart disease," and Emilio Muscelli, 30, charged with impersonating a poison victim to take out life insurance before the other man perished.

Virtually all of the known victims were pronounced dead of pneumonia. The poison used by the ring gives similar symptoms.

Road Laborers Win Right to Work Sans Union Card

Somerset, Pa., April 26 (AP).—Aroused farmers and laborers of this usually placid community won the right tonight to work on at least one section of Pennsylvania's $60,000,000 "dream highway" without joining a union and paying $15 initiation and $2 monthly dues.

The County Construction Co., building one of the links of the 160-mile all-weather thoroughfare, abrogated a closed shop contract with an A. F. L. union after three days of excitement.

Yesterday two A. F. L. organizers were driven out of town and the union headquarters was wrecked. Today the farmers swept down on the workers at the highway and persuaded them all to stop work.

Forced to Part From Child, Says Singer

Husband Insisted On Hollywood Career, Miss Talley Avers

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 26.—Marion Talley broke down and sobbed today at the hearing on her petition for custody of the daughter she left as a new-born baby to enter the movies nearly fours ago.

The one-time child operatic soprano from Kansas City wept as she testified she left the child reluctantly and at the specific behest of her estranged husband, Adolph Eckstrom, a singing coach, in order to fulfill her Hollywood contract.

Tears came to her eyes again when she was called upon to identify a snapshot of the 4-year-old girl who celebrated her birthday only yesterday—and was not at the hearing.

Miss Talley vehemently denied the child was born prematurely, and denied also Eckstrom's contention that she dieted stringently before the birth at the expense of the child's health.

The girl—called Susan by Miss Talley and Betty Ruth by Eckstrom—suffers from an eye disorder. She was examined last week by a physician who will be called to testify as to whether she needs an immediate operation. (Miss Talley contends that the operation is necessary and that Eckstrom is without sufficient funds to pay for it. He says a physician has advised a delay in the operation.)

Miss Talley testified that she made loans of $2,800 and $600 to Eckstrom which were not repaid; that she paid his traveling expenses and bought him clothes when he was her pianist on a concert tour in 1934, before they were married, and that he was in financial difficulties later.

In sketching her career, Miss Talley told of her first marriage, in 1932, to Michael Raucheisen, a German pianist, and of its subsequent annulment. She said her mother and sister went with her on her first honeymoon.

Wife's Boy Friend Offers Alibi In Auto Slaying of Husband

Norwalk, Ohio, April 26 (AP).—Mrs. Coletta Schlett's lover turned upon her today with a denial of frequent intimacy and a declaration he did not take her husband driving the night he was killed.

Harold Hastings, 33, unemployed steel worker, is on trial charged with speeding his motor car into Carl Schlett on a snowy highway last January, and leaving him dying.

"You heard Mrs. Schlett say yes-husband that night, did you?" Hastings was asked.

"There's nothing I can say," Hastings responded. "I didn't pick him up. It just wasn't me."

The defendant said he had been intimate with his 28-year-old inamorata only three times and not "two or three times a month" for a year and a half, as she testified.

Mrs. Schlett, indicted with Hastings on first degree murder charges but expected to go free following her appearance as a prosecution witness, had testified she refused his marry him. Hastings denied ever mentioning marriage.

Hastings told of visiting a cigar store and two lunch rooms the night Schlett died, and other witnesses verified his appearances at these places. Hastings also recounted he rammed a truck near a cafe in the snowstorm, breaking a headlight of his car. The State contends glass found near Schlett's body was from Hastings' car.

 WASHINGTON: THURSDAY, APRIL 27, 1939 19

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

The first century of baseball, like Cleopatra, is now history, but unlike Cleo, the game still retains features that will turn a man's head. In baseball they call it the bean ball, and our guess is that when, in 2039, baseball celebrates the start of its third hundred years no umpire will have tossed no pitcher out of a game for dusting a man off.

POVICH

League officials have ranted against the bean ball, posted notices in the dressing rooms and threatened fines and banishment, but there is no case yet on record of any penalties being imposed. Dusting a man off continued to be a quaint custom of baseball and skulls will be continued to be cracked ever so often. The umpires will look suspiciously at the offending pitcher, and nothing more will be done.

Very naturally no umpire dares to take action beyond warning a pitcher to desist. Because there is never convincing proof that a bean ball is deliberately pitched. The pitcher always has a ready excuse. He says simply that he was wild, that he lacked his usual finesse on the pitch and the umpire must believe him. The umpire can not rule on the pitcher's intent in the case for the simple reason that the human eye can not interpret the pitcher's mind.

We are taking bean balls as our text today because this week produced a notable victim. Al Simmons went into the dust and then into a Brooklyn hospital when he was struck by one of Van Mungo's pitches. Mungo didn't even draw a warning from the umpire. It was an accident. But all bean balls are not accidents.

Still Pitching Technique

Just as long as a good hitter is standing up there at the plate with a bat in his hand, it will be the pitcher's perogative to brush him back with an inside pitch. It is just as much a part of pitching technique as the windup. Any little thing the pitcher can do to prevent the batter from planting his feet solidly, taking a toe-hold and wading into his pitch, he will try to do. So he brushes him back, loosens him up, with a fast ball inside. The effect of the pitch, as it buzzes perilously close to the batter's head, is to arouse a bit of fear.

That done, the next pitch is directed at the outside corner, and unless the batter is absolutely fearless and is refusing to give any ground, he won't reach it. It's the same theory of a good football attack. Open up the defense with a series of passes, and then hit the line. Or, if you've induced the defense to mass close with line plays, pitch a pass over their heads.

Most all pitchers will dust a batter off. We dont mean that they will try to bean him, but they do like to keep him loose up there. Austin Lake, up in Boston, tells of an interview with Wes Ferrell. After Ferrell had hit a batter, the charge was made that he threw a bean-ball.

Bean Ball Aimed at Grandma

"You'd throw a bean-ball at your grandmother if she was up there with two strikes on her," somebody told Ferrell.

Ferrell denied it emphatically. "No, I wouldn't," he said. "But I'd probably brush her back a bit."

Catchers and pitchers have their signals for bean balls. On occasion, Rick Ferrell has admitted calling for 'em. "But it's not really a bean ball I call for," says Rick. "What I ask for is a high one inside. We're just trying to move the batter back a bit.

"It's easy for wild pitchers to get away with it. The umpires get suspicious when a fellow with control aims at a hitter's chin. I've had wild young pitchers and I've told 'em that as long as they're going to be wild, they ought to be wild inside instead of outside. It does 'em more good. But a good pitcher like Lefty Grove scares a fellow away from there by throwing at his feet. It's no fun to get hit by Lefty's fast ball."

When Rudy York was cracked on the skull by Monte Weaver in Griffith Stadium last summer, it was purely accidental. Weaver was a bit wild at the same time that York was guessing wrong. "I'm gonna whip this next curve ball," York told Ferrell. It wasn't a curve, but a fast ball and didn't break as York expected. York went down as if pole-axed.

Almada, Judge Lost Skill

Accidents like that more often than not induce plate-shyness. Mel Almada was a fine batter until Johnny Vander Meer put him in a Durham, N. C., hospital by cracking him on the skull in an exhibition game. After that Almada never wanted any part of an inside pitch, and standing from the plate, he was a sucker for an outside pitch. Joe Judge was never the same dangerous hitter after Earl Whitehill all but fractured his skull in Detroit several years ago.

Even a bean-ball accident doesn't affect the really good hitters, though. Cecil Travis still crowds the plate despite the fact that Thornton Lee cracked him on the head and put him in a Washington hospital. Travis still gets hit frequently, because he likes to swing late and thus has less time to duck. Lou Gehrig was beaned in an exhibition game in Norfolk, and the next day in Griffith Stadium he was cowed to the extent that he only hit three three-baggers. The beaning by Weaver didn't affect Rudy York.

But, every day in the big leagues, the bean ball still gets results, even when it doesn't hit anybody. What it does is cow 'em. And as long as umpires can not rule on the pitcher's intent, the bean ball will be with us for a long, long time.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, April 26.—Old Connie Mack, the spindly patriarch of baseball, lives on from year to year motivated chiefly by a simple ambition to win another pennant. But he privately confessed to us today that he feared the Yankees will continue to win flags far into the 1940's.

CONSIDINE

"There's only one thing that can happen to them now, to keep them from winning three, four, even five more pennants," the ancient manager of the Athletics said. "I mean boredom. That's the thing that stops great ball clubs from continuing to win after two or three years. Three or four of the key players will just get tired of winning; they'll begin to get irritated by that constant pressure that's on a winner. So they'll just up and play bad baseball."

Connie knows.

"I remember back aways we had a great ball club. A great ball club. That was our 1910 team. We won in '10, then in '11 and in '12 our boys were at their absolute physical peak. It was the best team I ever had, but we got licked by Boston because a couple of them were sick of winning, sick of defending something instead of fighting to get something. I had to fine three of them in the last six weeks of that 1912 season. But it didn't do any good.

Braves Humble Win-Weary A's

"But soon as we lost we were okay. We came along to win in 1913, with a team that wasn't nearly as good—mechanically—as the 1912 team. And we breezed home in 1914. But we were getting sick of it again by that time, I guess, because the Braves knocked us off four straight games in the series."

"However, Mack can't see this same occupational disease afflicting the Yankees. "Well, for one thing they're a very young ball club. And they've got all those good minor leaguers ready to come up. That'll keep the regulars hustling. They've got so many things the public overlooks too. Things like wonderful fielding, and braininess and great base-running, and great pitching. Honestly, I think their hitting is one of the least of their good points. Three or four teams outhit them last year. But of course when the Yanks hit they hurt. Gracious goodness, I hate to see one of our boys walk a Yankee player, because

Three Eligibles Leave Today For Derby

Challedon, Porter's Mite And Ariel Toy to Be Shipped From 'Graw'

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

Havre de Grace, Md., April 26.—Undismayed by reports that Johnstown has qualified for the Kentucky Derby more impressively than did War Admiral and despite peeks at the Jamaica chart which reveal that he was only a fifth of a second off the world record for a mile and 70 yards, trainers of three hopefuls will lead their charges into a horse car tomorrow for the trip to Louisville.

Arrangements were completed today for the shipment of W. L. Brann's Challedon, W. E. Boeing's Porter's Mite and Hugh Jackson's Ariel Toy to the Blue Grass State.

The three will be transported in the same car and are slated to arrive at Louisville on Friday morning.

Work Out in Rain

Rain and mud here this morning failed to keep Porter's Mite and Ariel Toy from taking a final workout over this track where both were soundly trounced in last Saturday's Chesapeake Stakes. Jockey Johnny Adams, who will ride Porter's Mite in the Derby, was boosted into his saddle, and the son of The Porter appeared at home in the sloppy going.

He showed some excellent speed in the early stages, completing a mile in 1:43 and then went on to a mile and an eighth in 1:58. His handlers said they were satisfied. While Porter's Mite was beaten off by Gilded Knight, Impound and Challedon in the Chesapeake, his owner says he has earned a Derby chance and will get it.

Steps 6 Furlongs in 1:19

Ariel Toy's poor performance in the Chesapeake has his handlers guessing. Leader in the opening stages and prominent at the half pole, he quit suddenly, dropping so far back that he was pulled up at the end. While not considered a mudder, Ariel Toy was sent 6 furlongs today and went in 1:19 under a strong grip.

Challedon's barn seems confident despite the 1939 Johnstown flood reports from New York. From Trainer Lou Schaefer down to the boy who carries water, Challedon is still a big noise. He qualified well in the Chesapeake.

'Second Guessing' Terry Opines After Giants Lose

Philadelphia, April 26 (AP).—Bill Terry, disillusioned because his New York Giants lost two in a row to the supposedly feeble Phils, said today he had been "second - guessing" himself.

TERRY

"Leaving for New York after a scheduled third game had been rained out, Terry sighed:

"I've been second - guessed by experts for several years, but this is the first time I've spent a couple of nights second-guessing myself."

"Bill couldn't have been worse affected, said a Giant player, "had they been World Series games."

Blue Peter Wins Newmarket Race

Newmarket, England, April 26 (AP). The earl of Roseberry's Blue Peter became the outstanding choice for the May 24 running o fthe derby at Epsom when he easily defeated 24 other three-year olds in the classic two thuosand guineas today.

The Chestnut Son of Fairway, favorite at 5 to 1, steppe off the mile in 1:40 to finish a length in front of Sir John Jarvis' Admiral's Walk. Sir Abe Bailey's Fairstone trailed by another three-quarters of a length in third place while William Woodward's Hypnotist, only American-owned horse in the race, could do no better than sixth.

After the race Blue Peter was offered and taken at 7 to 2 for the derby.

Blue Peter was always well up in the running, but it was not until the field started the final climb to the judges stand that he demonstrated his superiority.

Stymie Abolished - In Western, Junior Amateur Tourneys

Chicago, April 26 (AP).—Contestants in the Western Golf Association's two-match play tournaments this summer—the Junior and the Western amateur—will not have to worry about the stymie hazard.

The association, after a five-year study, reported today that players in its tourneys have been overwhelmingly in favor of abolishment of the stymie rule, and in the Junior and Western event this rule will be observed: "When both balls are on the putting green, the player farther from the hole may have the ball closer to the hole lifted; however, the ball closer to the hole may be lifted only upon such request."

The Western Amateur will be played at Oklahoma City July 11 to 17. The Junior will be played June 14 to 17 on the University of Michigan course at Ann Arbor.

Chicago's 4th Victory In Row; Lillard Allows Only 8 Hits

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 26.—The National League's pace-setting Chicago Cubs ran their victory string to four today as Gene Lillard, former Cub infielder making his major league debut as a pitcher, turned back the Pittsburgh Pirates, 3 to 1.

It was the sixth straight defeat for Pittsburgh.

Lillard allowed eight hits and walked four men, pitching himself out of severa ltight spots as the Bucs managed to get their first man on base in every inning but the fourth and ninth.

The lone Pirate run came in the seventh when Woody Jensen's fo...e out scored Gus Suhr after a single and two walks had filled the bases.

Mrs. Davy, Diffenbaugh Tied for 2d

Helen Dettweiler, Making Competitive Debut Here This Season, Cards an 85

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Mrs. Gale E. Pugh, Manor Club, took the lead at the halfway mark of the Mrs. Frank R. Keefer Cup play at Chevy Chase yesterday, pairing two consistent nines of 48 for a 96 and using an 18 handicap to good advantage for a net 78.

Mrs. Pugh's score had a one stroke advantage over Mrs. Myron Davy, Congressional, and Mrs. George Wiffenbaugh, Kenwood, who were next in the field of 143 starters with net 79s. The low 32 scores, and ties, qualified for the final 18 holes today.

Mrs. Davy, out in 43 and back in 41, turned in the lowest gross score of the day, an 84. Mrs. Davy played the back nine with only one 6, on the fourteenth hole, and finished with a par 4 on the long, last hole. She is favored to win either the low net, gross or both in the final round.

Helen Dettweiler Trails

Helen Dettweiler, making her competitive debut here this season in the first sponsored tournament of the Women's District Golf Association, combined nines of 42 and 43 for an 85. She played good, consistent golf all the day.

Four were tied with net 80s, well within a striking distance of the leader, including Mrs. J. F. Dowdall and Mrs. L. G. Pray, Manor, with 90 and 87 gross scores, respectively, with ten and seven handicaps deducted. Mrs. W. M. Moses and Mrs. George Hussey, Army and Navy, with 98-18, and 88-8, were also tied at 80. Mrs. Hussey started back with five straight fours and finished with 41.

Mrs. Charlotte Stern, Indian Spring, and Mrs. Leo Walper were five and six shots back of the pacesetter, both with 88 grosses, and Mrs. Stern with 83 net to Mrs. Walper's 84. The latter had 41 back after an outgoing 47, while Mrs. Stern paired 44s.

Gross Scores High

The gross scores among the low-handicap players ran higher than usual, Marion Brown requiring 90 strokes and Mrs. Betty Meckley 91. Two of Baltimore's finest players competed and were well back, Mrs. E. Boyd Morrow, many times Maryland State champion, with 94—6—88, and Mrs. T. E. Schluderberg, Baltimore C. C., with 94—5—89. Mrs. Walter Stokes had 92, and the host club stars, Mrs. Bishop Hill and Mrs. Landra Platt 91 each.

Defending champion, Mrs. T. J. Johnson, Army and Navy, had 96, with a 9 handicap for a net 87.

Mrs. Pugh's lead would be bigger

DICK BARTELL

Early Postponements Gave Dick Chance To Rest Injured Ankle

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 26.—Peppery Dick Bartell is cashing in on the silver lining he found behind the clouds which recently darkened the Chicago Club hopes of a second straight National League championship.

The $24,000 a year shortstop did not start the season April 18, but neither did his mates. Cloudy, cold, rainy weather forced the Cubs to wait until April 22 to start the campaign, and the postponements were "ill winds" which blew Dick a lot of good.

For an ailing ankle, which had sent him into a hospital April 4, was further strengthened by the enforced layoff and he fielded brilliantly as the Cubs downed the St. Louis Cardinals in Chicago's inaugural skirmish.

Going Strong

He's been going like a house afire ever since. Through Tuesday his batting average was .333, built on five doubles and a single. He drove in four runs, stole one base and hit for 11 total bases. Against Pittsburgh Tuesday he was pivot man on a lightning fast double play, his speed in getting to second to take Bill Herman's toss resulting in wiping out the fast Waner brothers, Lloyd and Paul. He didn't act at all like a hospital case. t "I'm tickled to death this ankle feels all right again," he said today. "All it needed was rest and those postponed games were breaks for me. And say, when you play between Herman (second baseman) and another fine infielder like Stan Hack (third sacker), you have to step fast to keep up with them."

Ready for Great Season

Bartell, along with Catcher Gus Mancusco and Outfielder Hank Leiber, came to the Cubs last winter in a deal which sent Ken O'Dea, Bill Jurges and Frank Demaree to the New York Giants. With Bartell apparently ready for a great season, Cub fans are positive Chicago got the best of the transaction.

Bartell's shrill, fiery voice carries to every part of the Wrigley Field stands and he has the same kind of color for which Cub customers long have admired Manager Gabby Hartnett. The veteran Mancusco has been handling pitchers smartly and drawing applause for rifle-like pegs which have cut down several would-be base stealers. Lieber is batting only about .263, but his defensive work has been excellent.

Greenberg Wallops Two For Circuit

Rogell's Single In Tenth Brings Detroit Victory; Tiger Rookie on Hill

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, April 26.—The Detroit Tigers climbed into second place in the American League today by taking a ten-inning home-run bee from the St. Louis Browns, 7 to 6.

Billy Rogell scored Hank Greenberg from second base with a sharp single to centerfield off Jim Walkup to break the deadlock.

Seven homers were swatted, two of them by Hank Greenberg, of the Tigers. Rogell and Charley Gehringer also hit for the circuit for the Bengals while Billy Sullivan, Mel Almada and Myril Hoag had homers for the Browns.

Bob Harris, Tiger rookie flinger, was credited with the win while Walkup, who relieved Louis (Buck) Newsom at the end of the ninth, was charged with the loss.

The Browns outhit Detroit 15 to 12.

Bill Dietrich Beats Indians For Chisox, 5-1

Chicago Crams 4 Runs Into Third Frame; Broaca Beaten

By the Associated Press.

Cleveland, April 26.—With bespectaled Bill Dietrich scattering eight hits in his first starting assignment of the season, the Chicago White Sox trounced the Cleveland Indians 5 to 1 today in the deciding game of their series.

The White Sox crammed four of their runs into the third inning in a foray which cost Johnny Broaca the first game he has pitched since jumping the New York Yankees' reservation in 1937.

Marv Owen drew a pass to start the trouble and advanced to third on Joe Kuhel's double. When Jim Webb threw wild to first on Gee Walker's grounder, Owen scored. But Luke Appling cleaned up the bases with a triple to centerfield, anyway, and Rookie Joe Dobson was pressed into pitching service by the Indians. Eric McNair singled Appling home, but the Sox were set down in order thereafter.

They collected their other run off John Humphries in the ninth when Owen beat out a hit to Webb and, with two out, dashed home on Walker's single to center.

Dietrich lost a shutout in the last of the ninth when Frank Pytlak opened with a single and scored on Jim Shilling's double to the leftfield bleachers.

The victory lifted Chicago out of a tie for sixth into fifth place in the American League standings.

Maryland's Medley Relay Team Draws Favorable Position In Race Friday

Georgetown and Maryland will be the only District colleges competing tomorrow on the first day's program of the forty-fifth annual Penn Relay Carnival at Franklin Field, Philadelphia, according to a schedule released last night. Catholic and American universities will remain idle until Saturday, the final day.

Maryland is to see action first as its distance medley team goes to the post at 4:25 o'clock Friday afternoon. The Terps drew a favorable position in this event which sends it against such high-powered opposition as Indiana, Michigan, Notre Dame, Manhattan and Pitt, being placed in the No. 2 lane.

The Georgetown 1-mile varsity relay quartet also was favored by the draw, getting the pole or inside lane. This is expected to make the Hoyas even more dangerous, for off their best times this spring they are capable to sneaking home in an upset.

Catholic and American received good positions in the Mason-Dixon Conference 1-mile relay championship, only event in which either is entered. The Cards drew lane No. 2 and American the inside, or No. 1. Maryland's Class B 1-mile relay quartet will run No. 3.

Georgetown's crack freshman 1-mile relay team, one of the favorites in a race that will bring together the yearlings of Penn State, Fordham, Columbia, Boston College, Manhattan, Texas Teachers and many other formidable combinations, was awarded the No. 6 spot in a field of 17.

It's 'Derby' Again At Louisville

Louisville, Ky., April 26 (AP).—It's "Derby" again. Back in 1930, when the Earl of Derby was the guest of honor at the Kentucky Derby, he emphatically said it was "Darby." That started considerable controversy.

Today the Courier-Journal and Times radio staton, WHAS, which has followed "Darby" since, returned to "Derby."

The Brighter Side

By Damon Runyon

Our old indictment of Western coffee still stands. That coffee is not good.

When we first presented charges a couple of years ago we got a lot of letters saying we could not have visited the right places. That is, the right places for good coffee. We have not visited them yet, either, but only because we were unable to find them.

RUNYON

We are inclined to think that the good coffee territory ends at Chicago. Beyond that is wilderness as far as the coffee is concerned. When we say that it is not good, we are giving some of the Western coffee plenty the best of it.

Understand, we are referring to the coffee that you get in public places. No doubt millions of the Western housewives make real real good coffee in their homes, but we could scarcely go barging about the country tapping on back doors and asking the lady of the house if she could spare a cup of good Java, though you can bet your life we would have done it had we the right addresses.

We got a little desperate about that Western coffee. There were moments when we would have gladly jimmied a kitchen window and nabbed the family percolator had we been sure that it contained a few dribblings of good coffee, such as you get in the average New York restaurant.

We have often wondered what it is they do to the coffee out West to make it taste the way it does, and we made a few investigations along that line on our last trip out there. It is our belief that it all comes, not of what they do, but of what they do not do to the coffee.

Not Coffee Drinkers

The whole thing is the Westerners are not the coffee drinkers that Easterners are. The reason is simple enough. The Westerners go to bed much earlier than Easterners and refrain from any considerable coffee drinking at night because of a somewhat general theory that coffee keeps you awake.

Therefore, not being practiced coffee drinkers, the Westerners do not know good coffee from bad. They accept their coffee without giving any consideration to the matter of it's quality. Sometimes they think it is good coffee just because they are not familiar with any other kind.

Mark you, we do not say that the Western coffee is purposely bad. On the contrary, we are sure that the public house keepers who dispense coffee want to serve good coffee, and think they are serving good coffee, but only because they do not know there is any better.

Since the Westerners are not by nature coffee drinkers, we cannot blame them for their passive attitude toward the coffee served them. If they were accomplished coffee drinkers, they would get up on their hind legs and roar like mad about that coffee, and that way they would create immediate improvement. We found the public house keepers cruly distressed when we complained of their coffee and very obliging about trying to remedy the calamity.

Beverage Too 'Weak'

Many Easterners are infiltrating into Western communities and that might be the hope of the West as far as the coffee is concerned, but for one reason. As soon as they try the Western coffee awhile, the Easterners turn to tea, milk or soft drinks or gin. They do not put up enough of a battle for good coffee.

It is our opinion that the trouble with Western coffee today is just what it was the last time we reported on the matter. The Western coffee makers do not use enough coffee in their manufacture of the beverage. Anybody can make pretty good coffee if they use enough coffee and let it cook the proper length of time, but here again the Western fault goes back to the Western coffee drinkers.

Not being habitual coffee drinkers, they do not like strong coffee. Indeed, you can satisfy them with just a light brown coloring to a little water, and that does not go for an Easterner nurtured on that stout, tarry fluid that will make hair grow on a billiard ball, and is really coffee.

The public houses of the West serve good food. As good, in fact, as you will find anywhere else in the land. The cuisine, in spots, is swell. The groveries are the best. Then at the end of a beautiful meal comes the shock of that coffee. It is very sad. We think legislatures out west ought to enact laws on coffee.

Our Western readers may just as well save postage stamps on this one. We gave their sectional coffee a good, thorough, man-sized try this time and when we got through we were still blushing for our native heath.

They used to make rare good coffee out there. We cannot understanding the change. It cannot be the climate. We are wondering if the Westerners are living right.

Some of that coffee we got out there was so bad we feel that it could not have been the work of human hand. It must have been a visitation.

Maryland Hunt Cup Race Set For Saturday

Gruelling 4-Mile Course; Amateurs To Ride All Entries

The Maryland Hunt Cup, America's greatest timber-racing classic, is slated for Saturday on the estate of J. W. Y. Martin, at Glyndon, Md., in the Worthington Valley.

The event, which is scheduled for 4 o'clock, is over a gruelling 4-mile course that is considered by experts to be the Aintree of the United States. Entries are to be ridden by amateur riders holding certificates from the National Steeplechase and Hunt Association.

Assured starters include John Strawbridge's great gray 'chaser, Coq Bruyere, whose only defeat in seven recent starts came two weeks ago at Middleburg; Hugh O'Donovan's Justa Racket, another gray, who turned back many fleet timber-toppers this season at My Lady's Manor; Maurice F. Powers' Lucier, who will be ridden by James C. Evans, of Buffalo; Blockade, who chalked up a notable victory in last week's Grand National point-to-point, near Baltimore, and P. D. Reid on Defiation.

A disappointment to local race followers is the absence of Gerald B. Webb, jr.'s Easy Mark in the classic. Easy Mark, who completely dominated Virginia's point-to-point circuit this spring, was being prepped for the big race, but, after a workout on the Glenwood race course, near Middleburg, Va., last week, the chestnut son of Hustle On—Clepatra pulled up with symptoms of a leg infection that makes his entrance in the Maryland race impossible.

Teams Total 32 Hits; Sargeant, Gillette Spark Cavaliers

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, April 26.—Scoring in every inning save two, Virginia defeated Washington and Lee here today, 10 to 8, to register its seventh victory in eight starts.

A total of 32 hits was amassed by the two teams, including a home run, four triples and a double. Of Virginia's 17, eight were divided by Sargeant and Gillette, while Walter Smith contributed three. Davis led the attack for the Generals, getting four in five times up, with Keim close on his heels with three, one a triple.

Nichols, starting pitcher for the Cavaliers, was driven from the mound in the second inning, and his successor, Smith, gave way to Joe Pinder in the final frame. The Generals had the tying runs on the bases in the ninth when Pinder snagged a hot drive to end the contest.

The fielding feature was Burnes' running catch of Thompson's long fly across the cinder track in deep leftfield.

Golden Terror, Jack Hader On Arena Mat

Laverne Baxter Meets Rosy Ryan In Semifinal Bout

Three bad boys of wrestling will growl and groan for the fans tonight at Turner's Arena—The Golden Terror, Jack Hader and Laverne Baxter.

The Terror and Hader are being rematched in the 90-minute feature bout which is designed to settle the ill feeling between the two. Baxter, who proudly points to his record here of six ringside riots, will meet Rosy Red Ryan in the semiwindup.

Hader, who attempted to maul The Terror in the dressing room last week after he was disqualified for bouncing a ringside chair on the skull of the masked man, has demanded two referees in the ring tonight.

Casey Berger, who also went down under Hader's irate charge with the chair last week, has refused to referee and even the intrepid Bennah Bortnick was said by Promoter Joe Turner's propaganda agent to be against taking over. Duties probably will fall to Cy Burns. Hader last week, just before mauling Berger, charged he was not getting fair treatment in the ring.

While Hader and The Terror are fighting for the honor of gaining the title of wrestling's No. 1 villain, Baxter will be going over Ryan in the hope of getting a shot at the winner of the feature bout. The supporting card, beginning at 8:30 p. m., will match George Pencheff and Ace Gordon, Hans Steinke and Jim Clinstock and Ernie Powers and Dutch Schultz.

Leonard and Caster on Hill as Nats, A's Open Here Today

Knuckle Ball Artists Meet At Stadium

Locals Show Signs Of Hitting Power As They Begin 2-Game Series With Mackmen

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Showing signs, finally, of hitting power, the Nats return to Griffith Stadium this afternoon to try out their new-found talents on Connie Mack's Athletics.

They will be motivated, too, by a desire for revenge, for today they will be meeting up again with George Caster, the Philadelphia pitcher who blighted Washington's opening-game hopes at Shibe Park last week.

On that occasion, Caster throttled the Nats with four hits and shut them out. He beat Jimmy DeShong that afternoon. Today the Nats will toss their No. 1 pitcher against Caster. Dutch Leonard will take the mound for Bucky Harris and thus the game assumes all the trappings of a knuckle-ball duel because Caster, like Leonard, features the knuckler.

To the support of Leonard, who managed a hard-earned 3-1 victory over the Yankees in his 1932 debut, the Nats may be bringing their new show of power. In Boston, early this week, Bucky Harris' club showde, for the first time since the season started, a commendable offensive.

In tthe two games at Fendway Park, the Nats mustered 26 hits and 14 runs, with the entire batting order partaking in the slugging. And today Buddy Lewis is expected to lend his bat to the attack. The Nats have not suffered from Lewis' illness, what with Charley Gelbert pounding the ball and playing brilliantly afield, but Harris likes to contemplate the possibility of Lewis' longer wallops.

Jimmy Wasdell, slowly recovering from a damaged thumb and a lame back, is expected to resume the first base duties today. Wasdell, same for one game-winning hit in Boston, has not impressed Harris with his batting, and first base continues to be the club's chief problem.

Notes of the Nats

Sammy West will continue in the Washington outfield when the club is facing right-handed pitching, but Estalella will get the leftfield assignment against left-handers . . . The Red Sox management gave the Washington club a break by calling off yesterday's game during the morning on account of wet grounds and enabling the Nats to catch a day train home . . . Correction: Rene Montagudo is not a papa of two months standing, as reported . . . but he will be a daddy within two months . . . Retaining confidence in Joe Krakauskas, Harris will start him against the Yankees again on Sunday in Yankee Stadium . . . The Nats' home stay will be of only two days' duration . . . After games at Grimth Stadium today and tomorrow, they entrain for New York, and then swing West . . . When Jimmy Foxx hit the home run that beat the Nats in the eleventh inning yesterday it cut short his growing beard . . . Foxx had vowed not to shave until the Red Sox won a game, and, after two straight defeats, he looked like a House of David recruit . . . A deal by the Nats is in the air . . . at the first sign of a spot for him, Rookie Joe Haynes will be given a starting job by Manager Harris . . . but Alexandra will be reserved for relief pitching duties . . . both Haynes and Alexandra broke into the big league under circumstances severe enough to lick 'em . . . the first man Alexandra faced was Joe DiMaggio, and Haynes walked to a big-league mound for the first time in his life and faced Jimmy Foxx . . . they got their men out nicely.

Ready for Old Dominion Dog Show Saturday

Blue Bloods of Dog Royalty Among 652 Entries at Alexandria

Adding another feature to a program which already presents practically all the comforts of home, officials of the Old Dominion Kennel Club yesterday announced Gordon Hittenmark, local radio announcer, will award hte trophy for the best-in-show Saturday at the club's all-breed outdoor show in Alexandria, Va.

Hittenmark will take over after Dr. Charles J. McNulty, judge of the best-in-show event, picks the winner from the six dogs selected as the finest in their groups—hunting and working dogs, hounds, toys, terriers and nonsporting breeds.

Champion will meet champion in the event, which will climax the day before a grim-faced group of dog owners and spectators. Blue Bloods of the Nation's dog royalty are included in the 652 dogs entered in the show—the largest ever staged by the club.

To keep one and all happy during the all-day show, kennel club officials have set up a cafeteria featuring home cooking and family rates in the Alexandria municipal ball grounds, where the show will be held.

After Dr. McNulty ends the "breath-taking bit of drama" involved in selecting the best-in-show, Hittenmark, known for his ease of manner in greeting visiting celebrities, will present the champion's owner with the silver trophy donated by Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Scharfeld.

Buses leaving from Pennsylvania avenue and Eleventh street northwest Saturday will be marked with show grounds placards, George Berner, president of the Old Dominion Kennel Club, announced.

Practice Today

The Pepsi-Cola baseball nine will practice Saturday at 5 p. m. on the Beltsville, Md., diamond, W. C. McKenny, manager, announced yesterday.

Cards Defeat Cincinnati, 1-0, Behind Davis

Moore's Accurate Throwing Helps St. Louis Triumph

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, April 26.—Two accurate throws by Outfielder Terry Moore helped Curt Davis pitch and bat the St. Louis Cardinals to a 1-to-0 victory today over the Cincinnati Reds.

Davis limited the Reds to five hits, but they could have scored one and possibly two runs had Moore's pegs been wild. In the sixth, Ernie Lombardi was nipped at the plate attempting to lumber in on Wally Berger's single, and in the ninth Moore nailed Ival Goodman trying to reach third on Frankie McCormick's single.

The Cardinals got only six hits off a trio of Redleg pitchers, Lee Grissom, Peaches Davis and Junior Thompson. Grissom yielded the winning run in the fourth. Moore worked him for a pass, went to third on Lynn Myers' single and scored on Curt Davis' single.

Garrett Park Wins

The Garrett Park Bengals belted Pitcher Lodge, of Briarley Hall, for ten hits yesterday to score a 4-to-2 victory at Beltsville. Catcher Ted Schildt led the Bengals' attack with three hits.

G.W. High Wins Triangular Track Meet

Woodrow Wilson Finishes Second And Blair Third

Alexandria, Va., April 26.—George Washington High School trackmen recorded their first victory of the season here this afternoon, amassing a total of 58 points to take a triangular decision from Woodrow Wilson High and Montgomery Blair. Wilson finished in the runner-up post with 45 points, while Blair trailed with 24.

Showing vast improvement over their opening performance against McKinley Tech last week, the Presidents came away with first places in the 14 events. Wilson won four events, including the half-mile relay, which was good for 10 points, while the Marylanders were credited with three firsts.

The Presidents scored the bulk of their points in the field events, in which they displayed a wide superiority over the visiting teams by taking four out of six first places. Montgomery Blair took the two remaining firsts, Wilson failing to win an event in jumping and weight division.

The Washingtonians, however, topped the field in the running events by winning both dashes, the mile run and the relay, while George Washington copped the low hurdles, the quarter-mile and half-mile runs, and Blair won the high hurdles.

Although his team finished in the last position, Bill Fitzpatrick, of Blair, was by far the most brilliant individual performer for the day, and copped high scoring honors with 13 points. He won the high hurdles in 16 seconds flat, took first place in the high jump with a leap of 5 feet 11 inches, and finished second in the broad jump. After missing the high jump bar at 5 feet 11 inches during the regulation meet.

the next one is liable to hit a home run and there we are two runs behind."

As long as the Yankees have Ruffing, Gomez and Pearson they'll never have a prolonger losing streak, Mack believes. "Those fellows are stoppers. All right, suppose the Yanks do lose a couple of games in a row, or three. Well, by that time one of those three pitchers is going to pitch, so the losing streak stops, because any one of them has an edge on any team he faces. It's a great advantage. Ruffing and Gomez don't seem to be slipping either. I guess they'll be the hardest men to replace during the next five years. Lot harder than Gehrig, I'd say. But the Yankees have a way of replacing veterans with good rookies. Look what they did with the vacancies left by Ruth and Lazzeri."

"DiMaggio the Greatest"

We asked Connie to pick us the greatest ball player in the game today and with only a moment's hesitation he said "Joe DiMaggio." DiMaggio will do a lot to destroy the old man's dreams for a long time to come, but when Mack spoke of him his pale blue eyes shone. "Don't ever let anyone kid you," he said. "Di Maggio's one of the greatest ball players ever lived. He'll go down in baseball history, I should know. I've been looking at ball players for 60 years. I'll tell you what makes him great. He does the hard things gracefully and often. He'll be good until the 1950's."

Mack sees a faint chance that sometime between now and 1945 that Boston, Detroit or Cleveland will break in and take a pennant away from the Yanks. "But to do it they'll either have to play over their heads or the Yankees will have to fold. Nobody can ever quite understand how an entire team can play over its head, but I've seen it happen a lot. That 1912 Boston Red Sox team, for instance. Every man on the club had a better than usual season. Washington did the same thing in 1933. Everybody got hot at the same time. So they won. One of those one-shot things. But somehow I can't see it happening to the Yankees. They've just got too much spirit, and teamwork and judgment."

It was time for the old man to leave his hotel to make his umpteenth thousand trip to the ballyard. His son, Earl, had gone out ahead of time, to see that the uncouth A's practiced. The old man went to the stadium alone, spare and fragile without his customary topcoat. He took his place in the extreme corner of the bench and a boy brought him a scoreboard. And soon he was waggnig it this way and that, pulling the invisible strings attached to his stiff-jointed puppets—an old gaffer who perhaps knew how to beat the Yankees but who had none of the troops and none of the ammunition with which to do it.

Thunder Sets Tempo as Navy Oarsmen Drill in Downpour

Coach Walsh Takes Crew Up Severn In Low-Stroke Haul for Lion Clash

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, April 26.—A downpour that at times made the oarsmen wonder if they were right side up failed to halt Navy crew practice today as the midshipmen prepped for the Columbia race Saturday.

Coach Buck Walsh took his crews up the Severn in a long, lowstroke haul. The Navy's seagoing Silver Fox concentrated on smoothing form and developing power in the stern of the boat.

There was no wind as the shells took the water but the rain was bucketing down and thunder set the tempo for the Navy fleet.

Capt. Fred W. (Kitty) Kittler and Walsh are expecting one of their toughest set-tos of the year Saturday against the Lions. The Columbia oarsmen, six of them Poughkeepsie veterans, average 183 pounds and 6 feet 3 inches in height.

Walsh is sticking to the same boatings that brought close victories over the Princeton varsity and Jayvee crews last Saturday. Tommy Walker, varsity stroke, who moved into the No. 8 seat after four days' practice, set a nice pace. Critics said the Navy lacked the power of the 1938 shell that swept the Hudson.

The Tars will work out early tomorrow afternoon before entraining for New York. Walsh expects to put his charges through a practice haul Friday over the Columbia course.

Imprudent and Nosy Finish One-Two in 'Graw' Feature

Both Horses Sired by Whiskalong

Winner Finishes 2 Lengths in Front Of Stablemate in Aberdeen Stakes

By a Staff Correspondent.

Havre de Grace, Md., April 26.—Imprudent and Nosy, sired by Whiskalong and running in the colors of Mrs. Ella K. Bryson, of Baltimore, finished first and second in the Aberdeen Stakes, 2-year-old classic. It was the filly and the colt at the end, winging along and slinging mud at Rumba Gus which closed third in a field of nine. Rumba Gus, winner of the Bowie Kindergarten Stakes in a gallant rush, found the task of spotting his speedy rivals 6 and 7 pounds, respectively, too much.

With fans, officials and turf writers trying their best to distinguish the colors through fog and rain, Imprudent led every step of the way and finished two lengths in front of her stablemate. Nosy was 2½ lengths in advance of Rumba Gus. Maetran, owned by the Maemere Farm, was the only one of the other six starters to be prominent in the running.

Directly after the break, Maetran appeared between Imprudent and Nosy for a brief interval, but dropped back and it was Imprudent, Nosy and Rumba Gus in order from that point to the wire. Jockey Ira Anderson had the mount on Imprudent. He had only to get her away in good style and she supplied plenty of speed without serious urging.

Rumba Gus downed Imprudent in the Kindergarten when the Whiskalong filly had trouble in the early running. The crowd of 7,500 installed Rumba Gus the choice and the Trainer Serior entry and Imprudent, Nosey and Arden Lass paid a $7.10 mutuel. This was Imprudent's sixth victory in seven starts this year and added $3,875 to bring her total earnings to $6,850. Imprudent's time of 0:54 was good for the muddy oval.

The combination of 11 and 1 was sufficient for a $68.10 pay-off in the daily double. Maidens of various ages comprised the field in the opening event and tips were selling for a dollar a dozen. A. G. Weston's Quiet Time lasted to take a neck verdict in the 6-furlong sprint. Part One, the people's choice and in the colors of Mrs. R. H. Heighe, was second, and fairly eating up the track at the finish. Brave Heart had heart enough to lead most of the way but was a staggering third at the wire. The winner paid an individual mutuel of $11.20.

Dissembler and Gorse, carrying 120 pounds each, finished heads apart in the second race. Jockey L. Hardy brought the Display colt along with a rush that collared the pacemaker, Gorse, in the stretch run. Kinross was a distant third in the field of six. The winner paid $10.10.

Jockey Maurice Peters scored an easy victory with Winston Guest's Drudgery in the fifth race. The Brooms gelding, scoring for the second time here, downed Slow Motion, Patsey Begone and three others at 6 furlongs to bring the favorite players a $4.30 pay-off. The race was a grade C affair named the Oakton Handicap.

Holding Tight—But This Isn't the Finish

Albelad (No. 3) was under wraps and holding the rail position as the field in yesterday's second race passed the judges' stand the first time around at Jamaica. He was the winner at the end of the journey. Henryels Pick (outside), finished second, and Noon Sun (No. 1) was out of the money.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—QUIET TIME, $11.20, $5.80, $3.70; PART ONE, $4.10, $3.10; BRAVE HEART, $8.60.

QUIET TIME, off in first flight, was rated to stretch, moved up to take command when shaken up and just lasted under pressure to stave off closing bid of PART ONE. The latter dropped back going to turn, ran wide leaving backstretch, and came with a bold rush in center of track to be wearing down winner at every stride. BRAVE HEART was rushed to top at once, shook off early challenges of BIG BUDDY and DINAMITA, but weakened in closing sixteenth. MAROC, close up from beginning, moved to BRAVE HEART with good energy inside eighth pole, but tired suddenly. HARDIHOOD made up ground throughout. DINAMITA stopped. BIG BUDDY weakened.

SECOND RACE—One mile and 70 yards. Purse, $1,000; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from stalls. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:06. Off 3:06½. Winner, A. L. Copeland, Jr.'s, b. c. (4), by Display—Imaginary. Trained by owner. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 1:49 1-5.

DISSEMBLER, off sluggishly and forced to be taken up mildly when in close quarters going to first turn, saved ground to half pole, swung out for racing room and were down GORSE to hold away to end. GORSE alternated in setting and pressing pace with CHAINWICK, drew clear leaving backstretch and hung on stubbornly when caught. KINROSS tired after improving position. CORNWALLIS could not reach contention at any stages. CHAINWICK had keen speed for half and weakened. WISE SISTER was through after a quarter.

Daily Double, Quiet Time and Dissembler, Paid $68.10.

ORCADES, keen forward factor from start, was rated leaving backstretch, responded gamely when placed to drive and wore down PERLETTE to win going away. PERLETTE went to front in opening quarter, saved ground and weakened inside eighth pole. LITTLE DRIFT was well placed from beginning and held on stubbornly in closing test. SUNNYSHORE lacked early speed and closed full of run. LADY INFINITE had speed in spots. ROYAL BUSINESS and RED GLARE were off poorly. SCOUT ABOUT had early speed.

RUMBA GUS saved ground throughout and went evenly. MAETRAN had good early speed and weakened in closing quarter. The others were not prominent.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,200. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stalls. Won handily; place same. Went to post 4:40½. Off 4:43½. Winner, Winston Guest's br. c. ZOSTERA was held safe throughout. HIGH HEDGE flashed early speed and quit badly.

BALAPIN, allowed to settle into stride, gained gradually after opening quarter, responded willingly when placed to drive and disposed of JAMES PAL to draw far out without urging in closing eighth. DARK FRIEND was held safe in closing test. JAMES PAL was rushed to take command going to first turn, drew out, but weakened after saving ground. JUSTA FLIGHT, a distant trailer for half, came wide for racing room and closed gamely. EARLY TIMES could not keep up. JUNE O had some early speed. The others were outrun.

Xalapa Clown In Fast Drill At Louisville

Derby Hope Breezes ¾ Mile in 1:12 1-5 And Mile in 1:41

Louisville, Ky., April 26 (AP).—Xalapa Slown, Mrs. Bessie Franzheim's Kentucky Derby aspirant, showed the railbirds a thrilling burst of speed today in his workout at Churchill Downs, breezing three-quarters of a mile in 1:12 1-5 and galloping the mile in 1:41.

Trainer A. C. Dettwiler, determined to test his "big horse," sent him from the barrier with the older Top Man. The Clown zipped the first quarter in 0:23, three-eighths in 0:34 1-5, half in 0:46 and 5 furlongs in 0:59.

It was the timing at the 5-furlong mark that brought cheers to the ears of Dettwiler, for the colt made it on the straightaway in the time of the track record around the turns. There were those on the backstretch who caught him even faster, as good as 0:58 3-5.

Tires Badly

At the wire the clockers reported the Clown as tiring badly. That was as Trainer Dettweiler had hoped. The move was not intended as a route test, rather one for early speed.

After the trials, the trainer announced that the veteran Sylvia Coucci would have the mount in the May 6 classic.

W. H. Whitehouse's American Byrd thrust himself further into the Derby picture with a mile spin which many considered equally as impressive as that of Zalapa Clown.

Under a strong hand ride the Byrd went around the choppy mile track in 1:40 2-5. The split-second showed 0:24 for the quarter; 0:47 2-5 for the half; 1:00 3-5 for the five panels and 1:13 4-5 for the three-quarters. Trainer "Spec" Runnels let it be known that he is seeking the veteran Charley Kurtsinger for the Derby.

North American Head Finds Sales Steadier, Home Use Greater

In the annual report of the North American Co., one of the Nation's largest utility chains, of which Potomac Electric Power Co. and Capitol Transit Co. are units, President James F. Fogarty, discussing the electric business in Washington, said yesterday:

"It is of course obvious that the electric business in the Washington area is of a different character from that of such highly industrialized territories as the other three groups of North American subsidiaries. The electric sales by Potomac Electric Power Co. are considerably smaller in volume than those of the other groups, but its sales continue at a steadier rate and the average use per residential customer is higher.

"While there is relatively little electric power used for industrial purposes in the District of Columbia and adjacent sections, and the load is largely of a residential and commercial character, there is at least one element of change in the residential load. Increasing numbers of apartment houses of one and two room units are being built or developed from the conversion of large residences to meet the needs of Washington's growing population. This is a metropolitan housing development that tends to decrease the average use of electric service per family. However, even the smallest dwelling unit is subject to a high degree of electrification and the cooperative activities of the Potomac Company and dealers affiliated with the Electric Institute of Washington have that objective.

New Construction

"Examples of their effort include a new apartment house of 191 units now under construction and another of about half that number recently completed, both of which are completely equipped with electric refrigerators and electric ranges, and in addition the latter building has electric air conditioning equipment. Arrangements have also been comhouses containing a total of 317 pleted for thecomplete electrification of two other new apartment units."

The consolidated net income of the North American Co. and subsidiaries for the 12 months ended March 31, was $15,952,733, equal after preferred dividends to $1.61 per share of common stock, as compared with $1.55 per share for the calendar year 1938 The balance for common stock, after all deductions including preferred dividends, was $13,811,004, an increase of 3.97 per cent compared with the balance for the year 1938 and a decrease of 9.11 per cent compared with that for the 12 months ended 31, 1938.

Devine & Co. Survey Government Securities

New York, April 26.—The 1939 edition of the annual survey published by C. J. Devine & Co., specialists in United States Government securities, was made public today. It reviews the trend of Government financing in 1938 and presents data on United States Treasury and Federal credit agency issues.

"The basic influences which have affected United States Government securities since the devaluation of the dollar in January, 1934, continued during 1938," the survey says. "Underlying a steadily increasing demand for Treasury obligations has been the constant flow of gold to the United States."

Copper Rises With Demand From Abroad

Futures Trading Highest on Record; Average Price 10¼c

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 26.—Spurred by a rising demand in foreign countries for copper, traders in futures established a record for purchases of the metal in the Commodity Exchange today.

They contracted for future delivery of 9,223 tons in 369 lots, the greatest one-session business recorded since copper futures trade began on May 15, 1929.

As they bid for the red metal, prices were pushed up from 0.29 to 0.32 of a cent a pound, making the average price for copper to be delivered next winter about 9¼ cents a pound.

Foreign demand, however, was only one of the factors causing the big market. American manufacturers, particularly in the Detroit area, were reported operating with such depleted copper reserves that copper producers, which of late have been cutting their prices to attract business, apparently decided renewed buying was assured.

Early this morning Phelps-Dodge Corporation, one of the biggest producers, boosted their price on newly mined copper ¼ cent, to 10½ cents a pound. Just before noon, American Smelting & Refining Co. raised its proce to 10¼ cents from 10.

With the general price of copper for immediate delivery at 10¼ cents and Phelps-Dodge's price ¼c higher, traders apparently decided to buy in fear of even higher prices in the future.

The resulting price rise brought the one-year-hence quotations within 1 cent of the spot price, although the futures quotations lately have been far below the immediate delivery price.

Wheat Futures Continue Rise On Crop News

Chicago, April 26 (AP).—Wheat prices continued to advance today on the strength of unfavorable crop reports from parts of the Southwest, but buyers were cautious pending further confirmation as to the extent of reported deterioration.

July and September wheat, representing the new crop, advanced almost a cent soon after the opening, reaching highs of 69¾ and 70¾, best in three months, but thereafter fluctuated nervously, with gains almost wiped out at times. These contracts closed ⅜@½ higher than yesterday, May, 69¾@69¾; July, 70¼@70¾. May wheat was depressed by selling prior to the delivery period and finished unchanged to ¼ higher at 69¾@69¾.

Corn finished unchanged to ¼ higher, May, 48¾@48½; July, 50⅛@50¼; oats, ⅛@¼ lower; rye, ⅜@⅝ up; lard, 3@7 higher.

50-Year Safety Peak Set by U. S. Railroads

The best general safety record in 50 years was established by the railroads of the United States in 1938, J. J. Pelley, president of the Association of American Railroads, announced yesterday. The number of train accidents, as compared with the number of miles run by trains, was the lowest on record in 1938. The actual number of train accidents in 1938 was one-third less than in the year 1937, and two-thirds less than in the year 1929. The accident record for employes, too, was the best in 50 years. Fatalities to employes on duty resulting from all kinds of accidents in 1938 totaled 479 compared with 666 in 1937 and 1,348 in 1929.

Business Index Declines in Week

New York, April 26 (AP).—Time Magazine's Index which reports on changes in underlying conditions likely to affect business volume, declined to 92 last week compared with 93.9 the previous week and 96.2 a year ago.

Continued nervousness in financial centers was the principal cause of the downward movement. Even a modest revival in new financing, it was stated, could rapidly alter the present trend of the index which is derived from money and banking figures.

Structural Steel Orders Increase

April 26 (AP).—The American Institute of Steel Construction today announced new orders for fabricated structural steel booked in March totaled 89,530 tons, a 10 per cent increase over the February total of 81,298.

Shipments in the month aggregated 122,918 tons against 83,546 in February.

Big Board Trading Recedes to Level Of 15 Years Ago

New York, April 26.—Daily average volume of trading on the New York Stock Exchange thus far in 1939 has amounted to approximately 913,000 shares, according to the Standard Statistics Co. today. If no improvement takes place over the remainder of the year, 1939 will mark a new low for recent years in security dealings in the Nation's primary market place, with a total of around 270,000,000 shares. From the standpoint of volume, the stock market is back where it was in 1924, when daily average trading was 954,000 shares.

Stock Exchange trading so far in 1939 has been but 59 per cent of the volume of 1926, which many economists have selected as "normal" for the computation of business indexes. The shrinkage in trading is more severe than the contraction in business activity, which has averaged about 87 per cent of the 1926 level.

The drying up of business in the New York market, which is typical of the experience of the lesser exchanges throughout the country, is symptomatic of the unwillingness of capital to take a chance as seen also in the contraction of new security flotations and the inability of the banking system to expand commercial loans

Bulk of Gold Sent in Year Pays for Goods

1938 Total 1.86 Billion 430 Million Invested Treasury a Factor

By the Associated Press.

Dr. Amos E. Taylor, finance expert of the Commerce Department, said yesterday that the bulk of the $1,864,000,000 worth of foreign gold and silver which came into the United States last year was sent to pay for American merchandise.

In his annual compilation of the "balance of international payments," Dr. Taylor pointed out that American merchandise exports exceeded imports in 1938 by $1,133,000,000 and that after deducting American payments to foreign steamship companies and other service payments, foreigners still owed the United States $965,000,000 for merchandise and services, which was paid for out of metal shipments.

In addition, foreigners made $430,000,000 of capital investments here for which they shipped gold, leaving an unexplained item of $469,000,000 which foreigners paid the United States, probably mostly through secret transactions of the Treasury's stabilization fund.

In 1937, foreigners owed the United States only $15,000,000 for merchandise and services, and a much larger part of the $1,469,000,000 of metal sent here that year went into capital investments.

Dr. Taylor also pointed out that in the first half of 1938 foreigners also withdrew huge amounts of capital from the United States, only to return even larger amounts in the fall because of the Czecho-Slovakian crisis.

Cotton Prices Rise Briskly, Closing at High

New York, April 26 (AP).—Cotton futures netted gains of 11 to 12 points today. The spot month developed strength when no further delivery notices were issued and a firm tone spread through the list. Outright May liquidation slackened although transfers from that delivery forward continued at a good clip.

A late covering movement followed Washington news that President Roosevelt did not contemplate abandoning the export subsidy plan, and favored a domestic subsidy payment. Prices closed at the day's highs.

Textile news from Worth street cheered the ring for the first time in days. Prices on most popular print cloths items advanced ⅛ cent a yard following an estimated turnover of about 30,000,000 yards late Tuesday.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

The Vanderbilt Cup championship for teams of four, played last week at the Hotel Shelton, proved troublesome for the Regency Club players. Four teams were entered from this club, and they found themselves bumping elbows, figuratively speaking, on more than one occasion.

Three of them reached the knock-out rounds—the groups led by Walter Malowan, Theodore A. Lightner and Walter Salmon jr. The Malowan and Lightner teams played in the same section during the qualifying sessions and on two occasions Malowan and his partners earned high scores, which put a decided crimp in the standing of his fellow club members.

A neatly bid slam by Malowan and Sherman Stearns against Mrs. S. W. Peck and Wingate Bixby provided one of the setbacks.

Overcall in Opponents' Suit

To reach the small slam, which was at diamonds, Stearns made use of the overcall in the adversary's suit, which is similar to the take-out double except that it shows a much more powerful hand and indicates no losers in the suit bid.

The hand, with East-West vulnerable and West dealer:

Stearns
♠ A K 10
♡ None
◇ A Q 10 8 4
♣ A J 10 7 2

Bixby: ♠ 8 7 2 ♡ A Q J 9 8 ◇ 6 ♣ K Q 8 6
Mrs. Peck: ♠ Q 9 5 4 ♡ 10 5 4 3 2 ◇ J 9 ♣ 4 3
Malowan: ♠ J 6 3 ♡ K 7 6 ◇ K 7 5 3 2 ♣ 9 5

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1 ♡	2 ♡	3 ◇	4 ◇
Pass	6 ◇	Pass	Pass
Pass

Opening lead: King of Clubs.

Though rather difficult to bid, it was an easy slam to play. Malowan won the king-of-clubs lead with the ace, drew two rounds of trumps and knocked out the club queen for a spade discard. The rest of the cards were high.

Bob Burns Says—

I never thought I'd live to see the day they'd have a fashion show and parade for men. But they had one out here in Hollywood last week showin' all the new styles the men would wear this Spring. Some of them sport coats they showed were certainly gay. It was the first time I ever saw a rainbow with buttons. Out here if a fella doesn't have 20 or 30 suits and 40 or 50 sport coats with slacks to match he's pret'near considered a nudist.

Grandpaw Snazzy went back home with one of them jazz suits and he says to my Aunt Boo, "Do you think the girls will like me in my new suit?".

And Aunt Boo says, "I don't know about the girls . . . but you'll sure drive the crows crazy!"

Things were sure different in the old days. A tourist said to Grandpaw Snelson one time, "Those trousers of yours seem to be on their last legs, Grandpaw."

And Grandpaw says, "Not yet, by a long shot, mister. These pants have two sons, and three grandsons to go yet."

Judge Hopkins Boosted For Federal Bench

Richmond, Va., April 26 (AP).—A Rocky Mount delegation, headed by J. Bradie Allman, visited Gov. Price today in the interest of Judge A. H. Hopkins, of Rocky Mount, in connection with the Western District Federal judgeship.

The Governor made no comment on the visit, except to state the subject of discussion. The Senate some time ago rejected Judge Floyd H. Roberts, of Bristol, the President's nominee who had the support of Representative John W. Flannagan and the Governor, but who was opposed by the Virginia Senators, Glass and Byrd.

Her Majesty the Queen:

Duchess Returned to Daughter With Three Tons of Empire's Gifts

Pang of Six-Month Separation Quickly Forgotten in Joy of Reunion; Lilibet Thrived in Grandmother's Care

By Lady Cynthia Asquith

Chapter XVI

As soon as the wild frenzy of primitive dancing had subsided at Rotorua, the Duke and Duchess of York were each presented with white feathers from the tail of a tribal sacred bird called the huia; and when these ornaments had been fastened into their hats, they were proclaimed a chief and chieftainess of the Maoris.

Besides the tail feathers of the huia, the Duke and Duchess were presented with many other unusual gifts, including some whales' teeth, a line in merchandise so highly prized by the Fijians that at one time a single tooth used to be able to purchase two wives!

Perhaps the most touching of all the presentations was made at Port Adelaide when two tiny children crept on to the royal dais and wetly whispering, "Will you please put this in Baby Betty's money box?" pressed two threepenny bits into the hands of the future Queen.

Thrived in Absence

Lent to her grandparents during the six months of her father's and mother's absence, Princess Elizabeth, in the clever charge of her nurse, had never suffered from even so much as a cold in the head. In every sense of the word she had thrived. In fact, she had developed into a real personality. At 18 months of age she already knew how to smile strangers into slavery, and would hold out her arms to a delighted crowd just as though it were one delicious chocolate that she would like to put into her mouth.

Toward the end of June, 1927, the Renown drew near the shore of England.

Surely no ship in the whole history of the seas can ever have been more deeply laden with treasurers for one child. At every single halt in their progress gifts to take home to their daughter had been showered on the Duke and Duchess, and the Renown returned a veritable argosy, bearing in her hold not only three tons of toys, ornaments, knick-knacks and geegaws of every conceivable kind, but also many dolls far larger than the Princess herself and a whole regiment of giant teddy bears.

Finally Neglected Public

On the afternoon of June 27 Princess Elizabeth was dressed up in her finest and most frilly frock and taken from her new home in Piccadilly to Buckingham Palace.

Just at that time her father and mother were arriving at Victoria Station; and here we come to the only recorded instance of a temporary neglect of the public ever shown by Queen Elizabeth. Alighting from the train, she found an immense crowd gathered to welcome her. But for this once she found the expected customary "slow-motion" progress through the station an absolute impossibility. Her eagerness to see her baby after so long a separation made her, for once, forget her part and she—hurried! For this solitary lapse she promptly made amends by driving from the station to Buckingham Palace through the pouring rain in an open carriage.

Meanwhile, Princess Elizabeth arrived at the palace, hears an unusually loud noise, and when she asks its cause, she is told that it is the kind people saying how glad they are that her father and her mother have come back safe to London.

Parents Are Strangers

Father? . . . Mother? Father and mother are just pictures in big frames that stand in the nursery, so she is puzzled by this information. Her blue eyes look perplexed.

At last her grandmother, Queen Mary, picks her up in her arms and, pointing to a pretty lady with a very excited face, says: "There's mother—Lilibet!"

How will the baby receive this stranger mother? It is an anxious moment.

All is well. After one swift bright blue glance of inquiry, Princess Elizabeth seems almost as pleased with her mother as if she were a large crowd. Her round face breaks into a wide smile and her arms go out.

At the sight of this enchanting pair of smiling Elizabeths reunited, two wishes rose in the heart; that the daughter might grow to resemble the mother, and that for the mother, the summer of life might prove as fair as its spring.

KIDNEYS MUST REMOVE EXCESS ACIDS

Help 15 Miles of Kidney Tubes Flush Out Poisonous Waste

If you have an excess of acid waste in your blood, your 15 miles of kidney tubes may be over-worked. These tiny filters and tubes are working day and night to help Nature rid your system of poisonous waste.

When functional kidney disorder permits poisonous matter to remain in the blood, you won't feel well. This may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. If you have trouble with frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning, there may be something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Kidneys may need help the same as bowels, so ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.—Adv.

O'Conor Signs Record Budget, 73 Other Bills

Bowman Measures Merging Bureaus Become Law

By the Associated Press.

Annapolis, Md., April 26.—Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor swung into action today and approved 15 resolutions and 73 bills, including the record-breaking $95,000,000 biennial budget.

Including the budget measure, 12 bills of State-wide effect were signed. Others approved included local measures relating to taxation, bond issues and municipal government.

One measure adopted "Maryland, My Maryland," as the official State song, and another recognized Armistice Day as a legal holiday.

Changes in several State departments, recommended by the Bowman commission report, became law as the Governor affixed his signature. These will change the department of welfare to the department of correction, in charge of penal institutions; reorganize the bureau of labor and statistics and provide a constitutional amendment referendum on the establishment of people's courts.

Two Subject to Referenda

Another measure receiving approval will revise the State unemployment compensation law, reducing the waiting time before the start of benefits and eliminate much clerical work incident to compliance with the law.

Two of the laws are subject to referenda. One would increase the compensation of State legislators from $5 a day during sessions to $750 annually. The other would bring the State's judges under the provisions of the State income tax law.

Creation of a legislative council of 14 members, to function between legislative sessions and recommend needed legislation, was approved along with bills fixing the State real estate levy at 23.35 cents, defining the personnel of the State board of health, and revising the plan of naming the State board of motion picture consors.

Approval of a bill creating the Upper Potomac River District and Commission was regarded as another step toward construction of the proposed $2,500,000 Upper Potomac River Dam near Cumberland. The bill authorizes the Allegany County commissioners to borrow $1,000,000 and to accept Federal aid on the project.

Western Maryland Bills Signed

Other bills affecting Western Maryland included ones authorizing a $35,000 water bond issue by the Town of Frostburg; defining the duties and fixing the compensation of Garrett County election officials, and forbidding Garrett County commissioners from entering into contracts involving more than $300 without advertising for bids.

The bill approving a $400,000 Washington County bond issue for construction of a new courthouse and jail received approval, as well as two others empowering Hagerstown city officials and Washington County commissioners to contribute to the dental division of the Washington County Public Health Association.
